With two teams in the O.H.A., and twelve teams in the Town League Lindsay should have enough hockey this season. The next thing will be the question of accommodation. How will the games be played, or rather, where. However, the fans have every confidence that matters will pan out all right.

THE VERY IDEA COMPANY

"The Very Idea" is the right name for the comedy which comes to The Grand on Wednesday next, Dec. 18. It arrives here with the recommendation of a highly successful engagement in New York, where it ran for six months at the Astor Theatre, and with long runs in both Chicago and Boston.

The ramifications of the plot are many, but the story starts from the fact that little Gilbert Goodhue, a cheerful nonenity, and his ablepated, pretty wife were over-fond of children, but had none of their own. They might have adopted one, had not brother-in-law Alan, whose one-tracked mind was burdened by an embargo on all save eugenic ideas, and who indeed has written a book on the subject, stepped in with a better solution. Why should Gilbert and his wife content themselves with an orphan child, when they might assure themselves of the quality of their little one by intelligent experiment in eugenics—in other words, by choosing not the child but its parents-to-be, and then taking over ownership in the result? They finally agree to his scheme, but all does not turn out as planned and only the intervention of Providence brings solace to the two sets of parents.

Although written upon a very ticklish subject, there is nothing offensive in any line, situation or character in this play. As for the real subject matter, that important personage whom everyone loves, namely, the human baby, is handled throughout with the highest regard and respect. His desirability in the household is left in no kind of doubt, and the importance of the proper choice of his parents gives the play an undercurrent of truth and common-sense.

PETERBOROUGH, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1918

A Peterboro Soldier Writes Interesting Letter to His Parents

Gunner J. M. Davies Was Present at the Capture of Mons—Bombing Bridges.

Gunner James M. Davis of the Trench Mortar Battery, writes the following interesting letter to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Davis, 234 Murray street. Gunner Davis tells of the excitement in the towns near the front lines, and of the speech of President Poincaire at the time the armistice was declared.

The Letter.

Dear Mother.— I was just writing Sunday morning when the boys came in and said President Poincare was going to be up in the city square and there was going to be a big celebration. I left the letter and we went up; it was a grand sight. A Highland regiment (Canadians) supplied the band and the guard of honour. There was all kinds of cheering and we did our share, although we didn't understand what he was saying, which was in French. We came back and had dinner about two, and shortly afterwards we got orders to go up to the line. Our feelings were high at the time after all the excitement.

Returns to Trenches.

However, as we approached the town, where we afterwards got into action, we were somewhat more serious. The President had said during his address that an armistice was expected that night, so we had all sorts of funny thoughts as to our luck. We rode part way into the town, which appeared to be deserted in the darkness and while stopping to inquire our position, a bunch of machine gun bullets came down the street, some hitting the house where we stopped. The wind was up proper, so the officer sent us into one of the houses while he found the battalion we were to work with.

Billeted in the Town.

The house was occupied, to our surprise, by an old couple and their son. They made us comfortable beside the fire and I was mighty glad, as I almost perished riding in the open truck. Do you remember the tea tablets you sent. Well I had over half of them left so we made a pot of tea for the bunch, and it was good. We didn't have milk or sugar, but it tasted good just the same. The officer came back and said we could find some billets until morning, so we started out and four of us got into a house which at first we thought would be empty, but found about three families sleeping in the cellars. They wanted us to come down too, but we said we would be Jake upstairs, so they made us use a spare bedroom off the kitchen. They made coffee and we had to have three or four cups of it before we got started to bed. All the other fellows eventually got in and I was just taking off my boots when the sergeant came in and said we had to take the guns in ready for the morning.

Hauling the Guns.

Well it was a rush to get dressed again and get out. They sent us walking up the street as he was sweeping it with machine guns at intervals and the truck was to follow. We got up to the corner where we were to unload about ten minutes ahead of time, so we got into another house and found the cellar of it full of people. Eventually we heard the old truck coming up and Gerry opened up with his machine guns again and sent a belt of them down the street. We had to unload the gun at this point and carry it another block up and over a block into a garden.

Bombing Bridges.

I guess we were all pretty nervous, but you know it has to be done, so we got out and unloaded the gun and bombs and it took five trips to get it all up to the garden. We had 40 bombs and they weigh 48 pounds apiece. By jove I was mighty glad to get off those streets, a bullet passing you every little while and so soon to the end of it all was no pleasant sensation. I had the usual luck and was picked out as a runner and was left at the battalion to come down for the fellows early in the morning, when they expected to go over. About two o'clock in the morning a runner came in with the news that he was evacuating the town two miles on the right and that "D" company had got as far as the station. I laid down and had a little sleep and woke up about five o'clock and the battalion was going forward. The patrols had brought in news that Gerry was moving back on the canal, so that left us out. Our work was to bomb a bridge over this canal, as the infantry shoved him on to it. However he saved us the trouble. About six o'clock we got the word about the armistice being signed and firing was to stop at eleven o'clock. After a while I got away from headquarters and got down to our billets to tell the fellows.

After the Armistice.

Well the people at the house where we were staying were all out in the street cheering. Thy hadn't heard the news about peace, but I hadn't come back with the other fellows the night before so I got quite a welcome. They made me sit down and one took off my tin hat and another my gun. Why it was the funniest thing you ever saw. All the neighbours came in and I had to give away my badges as souvenirs of Canada. The lady had about eight slices of bread buttered for me and a pitcher of coffee. The little girl got a basin of water for me and I had a good wash and fixed up a bit. By jove they were waiting on me hand and foot. The news soon spread and everyone got out their Belgian flag, and talk about celebration and cheering. You had to go in with everyone and have a cup of coffee. I'll bet I had fifty cups that morning. They decorated our truck with their flags and all afternoon we paraded around the town. They gave us cigars and women and girls climbed on with us. The old men would grab you and kiss you on both cheeks, which I believe is the custom. Every person was nearly crazy.

March Into Germany.

We left in the evening and came back to the city, where we started out from about fifty kilos. We had an inspection parade this morning and a clothing parade this afternoon, so here we are with no more war worries. No doubt we will be leaving to-morrow or some time soon, and the rumour is we have to go 170 miles, which will take us into Germany. It will be more like a sight-seeing tour. It will be necessary to follow up to see that he gets out alright. I suppose you will have big times at home. I was wondering just what it would be like.

Getting Home.

The next question is when will we get home, but we don't expect that for a few months at least. Mother I am enclosing a small piece of lace. This place is famous for lace, so I thought we had better have a sample. I would have got something better but it is very expensive and I just had the three francs. Well I am afraid this is all the news I can think of this time with all the excitement on. I will try and keep you well posted as to the doings on this side. I hope you are all well and that it won't be six months before I see you all again. Good-bye for now, with good wishes and heaps of love. As ever. JIM.

Chinese Woman a Surgeon in Bellevue Hosp.

MISS PANG YUEN TSEO GAINED HER DEGREES FROM THREE AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES.

NEW YORK. — A Chinese woman surgeon, Dr. Pang Yuen Tseo, has just been assigned to the ambulance staff of Bellevue Hospital. Dr. Tseo holds degrees from three American universities, and when she completes her course as interne, in Bellevue, she expects to return to China to teach and practice medicine.

Dr. Tseo is a daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Ling Han Tseo, of Nonchang, China. Her father is a jurist, and former Chinese Educational Commissioner to Japan. Her grandfather was Governor of Kiangsi Province.

After she was graduated from a boarding school at Kiukiang, China, Dr. Tseo was sent to this country by the Educational Mission of the Chinese government. She arrived in 1909 and was graduated from Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., in 1911. In 1915 she completed a course in science at Michigan University, Ann Harbor. She was graduated from Rush Medical School, Chicago University, last June.

"There are great opportunities for women in the practice of medicine in China," Dr. Tseo told a reporter. "Chinese women greatly prefer to be attended by women physicians, and there are very few of them, probably not more than hundred altogether. Of these about twenty have been educated abroad.

"I could have received my training at home, for we have good medical schools, some under the Foreign Mission Boards, and some under the Chinese government. There is also a Rockerfeller Foundation, but I preferred to come to America, because I could learn other things there while I was going to school. I feel that I have gained much from my college friendships, and I think I shall have something to carry back to my own people from contact with a real democracy.

"The new Chinese government is democratic, too, and very progressive. You can understand how progressive when I tell you that the government co-operares with the medical schools that they may obtain human bodies for the study of anatomy. In China there is a great religious prejudice against cutting a human body, for to the Chinese the body is sacred to the individual.

Buckwheat Coal Not Chargeable

City Clerk Armstrong has received the following letter, which is self explanatory:

Office of the Fuel Administrator for Province of Ontario.
E. L. Cousins,
Asst. Fuel Admr. for Ontario.
Attention of Mr. R. M. Yeomans.
Subject—Buckwheat Coal.
Toronto, December 10th, 1918.

Mr. S. R. Armstrong,
Secretary,
Board of Fuel Commissioners,
Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Sir,— We acknowledge herewith your letter of December 5th, dealing with the question of buckwheat coal in stock in your city.

Buckwheat coal is not chargeable against your allotment, and, therefore, no objection can be made to allowing your citizens to secure a sufficient supply of this grade of coal to make up the 30 p.c. reduction which was made in their allotment for this year.

Yours very truly,

Ass't Fuel Administrator for Ont.

BOLSHEVIK TO HIS WIFE.

The Minskoye Slovo publishes the following letters alleged to have been written by a "squad commander" elected by his fellows, commander of a Bolshevik regiment, to his wife, in a Russian village:

"My greatly respected wife, Agripini Ivanovna: In the first lines of my letter I inform you that by the grace of God and the will of my soldier comrades, the blood of the nobility is now flowing in my veins, because I am now Father Commander of the whole regiment and of its war chest. I enclose Rs. 100, with which you must buy yourself an astrachan coat and a feather which is worn on the head.

You are not to keep company with the women of the village, but you must call on the officers wives. Do not rush into their houses like a swine, but let yourself be announced to let you know who you are.

Your husband and at present Commander of a Regiment.

The Good Roads Question Becomes a Live Topic

Mr. Elliott Replies to Mr. Finlay Contending That Peterboro County Stands Very High in Regard to Roads, but Scores the Government's System.

To the Norwood Register.

Dear Editor,—I am sorry to ascertain by reading your valuable paper, that in expressing my views on a public question I have elicited from Mr. Finlay words indicative of hurted feelings. I fail to see where I did it, but if I did I will apologize by saying I have nothing but the friendliest feelings towards Mr. Finlay.

Mr. Finlay owes the pathmasters of this county an apology as a result of saying Peterborough "has the worst roads in the province." Gentlemen who travel by vehicle at their own expense (not M.P.'s railway with passes) say that Peterborough county stands among those very high on the list with regard to roads.

He also owes the County Council an apology, for there is no one man living who can handle the County Council, not even if he be clever enough to stand still at the instance of a combine or merger for a certain consideration and let such combine deal with the public without his competition.

It has been said that faith would move a mountain, but I would advise Mr. Finlay not to pin too much faith or bluff to his scheme of attempting to scare the County Council into a system that would require all of the farmers of the county to pay over 80 cents to get 20 cents of the people's auto license fees for 1-5 of the roads of a county when 75 per cent. of the farmers would not use such roads.

I would request him to read the resolution of the Canadian Good Roads Association requesting the Government to maintain the main highways.

Yours respectfully,
ED. M. ELLIOTT.

GETTING TOGETHER

There is reason to believe that Theodore Roosevelt expresses the sentiment of most American citizens —of almost all of them who are not afflicted with cronic Anglophobia— in what he says about the Anglo-American arbitration treaty and the vexed question of "freedom of the

Mr. Roosevelt was formerly opposed to international arbitration treaties between the United States and other powers, which would bind the United States Government to accept the decision of the arbitration tribunal even at the sacrifice of national interests. He used to say that the acceptance of such a decision might be so disastrous that the U. S. Government would be compelled to repudiate it and thus comit an act of dishonor. He did not wish to have his country placed in such a situation that it might be obliged to act dishonorably. His position was understandable and not unreasonable.

But, so far as Britain is concerned, Mr. Roosevelt now withdraws his former opposition to a treaty which would provide for the settlement of all disputes between the two countries, even those involving national dishonor, by arbitration. It is the war which has changed his point of view. He sees now that the ideals and aims, the principles and general spirit of the British and American peoples are so similar that there is no reason to dread the dangers which he once thought he saw in agreeing to have all disputes settled by arbitration.

With regard to "freedom of the seas' it is evident that Mr. Roosevelt has no desire for the imposition of any international restrictions which would cripple British sea power in any possible future war. He cheerfully admits that the character and necessities of the British Empire are such that it is a matter of vital necessity to the Empire to maintain the most powerful navy in the world. He feels sure that that navy will never be employed against his country or in any unjust cause.

But more importat even than Mr. Roosevelt's attitude is that of President Wilson towards this question of "freedom of the seas.' News comes to-day that Mr. Wilson has let it be known that his interpretation of the phrase which he used in his peace program of fourteen points is an interpretation which does not differ materially from the British interpretation—that he has no intention to oppose the right of search at sea or the blockade, when put into effect with a reasonable regard to the rights of neutrals.

This is very good news, if it is true. It ensures solidarity of policy and principle between the British and American representatives at the peace conference.—Hamilton Herald.

THE DUTY OF THE HOUSE

In the different municapities throughout Canada just now, there is far more than the usual interest being taken in the election of the different civic legislative bodies. It is recognized that there are problems in regard to the absorption of the returned soldiers into civic life and the restoration of normal business conditions that will be a strain on the wisdom of the most competent men, and therefore in many centres special efforts are being made to secure the services of the men most fit by reason of their ability and training to handle the civic affairs during the trying days that are ahead. For instance in Belleville, the Board of Trade has appointed a committee to secure candidates whom they think will be the most sincere for the different civic positions.

The usual method that Peterboro has carelessly allowed in the selection of city rulers should be scrapped on this occasion. It has been the custom in the past to take no interest in the nominations vote if the weather happened to be too stormy and refrain from doing so if the polling day happened to be disagreeable. A citizen would look at the list of candidates and size them up according to their popularity or otherwise and then make his decision. If Alderman Blank was what is vulgarly termed a "pretty good scout," that was considered sufficient reason for voting for him. He may not have had business ability enough to successfully operate a peanut vendour's stand or judgment even equal to that of the Crown Prince, but as long as he was popular the lack of ability or judgment did not seem to prejudice his chances for election.

The electors of Peterboro should this year look upon the election of aldermen as a straight business proposition. If they were selecting a manager for a private concern they would not choose him because he went to this church or that church; belonged to this society or that society; or parted his hair in the middle or on the side. They would demand from the applicant business ability, intelligence, energy, honesty and fore-sight, and the man whose chief asset was that he was a "pretty good scout", would stand little chance of being elected if he did not combine with his popularity the qualities named.

It is undoubtedly true of the selection of managers for private business —why should not the same test be demanded of those who are to manage aur civic affairs. Here in Peterboro we have a man's-sized business with a turnover of hundreds of thousands of dollars a year. The money that is expended each year we have to provide—then, in the name of common sense, why should we be so careless in our selection of the men to whom we entrust the expenditure of this revenue?

Let us tackle this big task of securing a competent business board for next year with a determination to place in office men who appreciate the opportunities their position will give them to serve the public, men who are able to differentiate between economy and parsimony in the spending of the city's money, men who have a clear grasp of the problems that are to come up

MAPLE LEAF CLUB OF LAKEFIELD HELD ANNUAL MEETING

Officers Elected for the Coming Year—Lakefield News.

LAKEFIELD, Dec. 12.—On Thursday evening, Dec. 5th, the Maple Leaf Club met in the Town Hall and elected their officers for the coming year. The following officers were elected:

President—Miss Hilliard.
Vice-President—Kathleen Bygott.
Secretar,—Evelyn Northey.
Treasurer—Mary Johnson.

Executive Committee—Ida Webster, Helen Simpson, Helen Watson, Ruth Morin and Margaret Charlton.

This club of sixteen girls, all under fourteen years of age, have met for the past two years under the direction of Miss Hilliard, and have done a great deal of patriotic work. A surprising number of caps and socks were knit for the soldiers, and various other comforts were made and sent away. In the year 1918 these little girls sent donations of money to the Secours Nationale, the Belgian Relief Work,the British Navy League, the Canadian Red Cross, the Prisoners of War Fund, and the Maple Leaf Club, London, England. The activities of these busy little girls are summed up very correctly by Kipling:

"They are little but they're wise,
They're a terror for their size,
And they do not advertise."

Young People Meet.

After the programme the next half-hour was spent in knitting socks and sewing gauze garments for the soldiers.

A meeting of the Executive Committee will be held on Tuesday evening next to arrange the programme for the next three months.

POWDER AND BALL

The Deadly Successors to Man's First Crude Weapons.

FROM JAVELIN TO CORDITE.

Cannon and Guns Are Merely in the Nature of Chemical Catapults—The Introduction of Explosives and the Principles Governing Them.

When the first man in the old stone age thousands of years ago threw his first javelin against a hairy mammoth he put his foot over the threshold of the problem of explosives. For it seemed to him—and our feelings today are with him—that it would be more pleasurable if one could hurl and kill one's enemy without the gratuitous thrill of having to sit on the massive beak on the verge of a cavernous mouth or of having to approach within a few paces of the huge legs which might the next moment descend upon him. It would be more convenient to stand at the cave entrance on a dizzy ledge of rock and hurl a weapon at the distant enemy.

So man was driven to invent the catapult, and a gun is merely a chemical catapult. The trigger is pulled back like the leather of the catapult, and the sudden and extraordinary expansion of the explosive corresponds to the elasticity of the rubber or spring, the essential feature of both instruments being the employment of some source of more than human power which can be made to yield up its energy at a given moment in the required way.

Explosives are, therefore, tabloid energy or power, and it is a just reminder of the fact that some substances are explosive generally, whereas quite a number of common things may be made explosive by some particular kind of treatment. When water boils on the fire there is no explosion as it is changed into steam, but if the spout were sealed and the whole of the water could be changed into steam in a second there would be an explosion. And the instance is good because it is really a kitchen model of a volcano. Moreover, steam guns were used in America in the sixties.

The essential idea of an explosive is then the violent release of some pent-up thing; just the opposite, from this standpoint, of the catapult, which works by allowing a distended thing—the elastic—to contract suddenly, whereas all explosives release a compressed thing. The release gives rise to an air wave, and this, of course, is experienced as a sound. It is the sound which is popularly called an explosion.

Now, it has been said that an explosive is tabloid force, power, energy. How is it made available? It is easy to follow the mechanism of an explosive further. Explosives, as commonly used, are solid substances which, by burning, produced almost instantaneously an extraordinary large volume of gases. The heat and pressure of a blow cause the burning to start, and the burning also produces heat which, acting upon the gases, increases the volume still further. It may be suggested that there is no obvious reason why even a sudden and enormous expansion should cause the damage of an explosion. And the suggestion is quite just.

It is only when they are confined that explosives are really dangerous. Gunpowder burned in the open merely causes a noise like "pouf" and burns quickly. Guncotton may be burned on the hand—it is not to be recommended as a fashionable hobby without any serious inconvenience. Indeed, gunpowder was first used as an incendiary composition. But a firework or a gun charged with gunpowder will explode with a loud report and may cause fatal wounds.

Gunpowder is the best known explosive mixture. It is made from the commonest ingredients—carbon, sulphur and saltpeter. There are several modifications of gunpowder, other nitrates being substituted for the saltpeter—potassium nitrates. The nitrates give the oxygen to the mixture, without which it would not burn at all, other explosive mixtures containing chlorates which have the same amount of oxygen as saltpeter and the nitrates. The different powders are used in different circumstances where a more violent or a slower or a safe explosive is required, for it is not always the same effect which one asks from an explosive. Velocity may at times be sacrificed, say, in favor of a higher weight of common shell. Gunpowder is a "low" explosive. Its explosion is slow, and its effect is less violently disruptive.

Dynamite is probably the best known "high" explosive, and the name does not stand for one particular substance, but for a large class, which are, in effect, diluted nitroglycerin and which are generally used for blasting.

Guncotton may be described as a nitrate of cotton wool (which the chemist would call cellulose). Both nitroglycerin and guncotton are less useful as explosives themselves than their derivatives, although Russia and the United States use compressed wet guncotton in their high explosive shells. One of the most famous derivatives is the smokeless propellant called cordite.—Philadelphia Ledger.

It is not what the best men do but what they are that constitutes their benediction to their fellow men.—Phillips Brooks.

The British Army.

"To have commanded this splendid army, which, at a time of grave crisis, has so nobly done its duty, fills me with pride. We have passed through many dark days together. Please God these never will return."—Sir Douglas Haig.

"The Special Order of the Day issued by Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig to the British armies in France is the splendid corollary to that historic Order of the Day in which, during the great German offensive in the spring, the Commander-in-Chief called upon the soldiers under his command to hold on," says the London Port. "They held on. They were bent but never broken.

"Once again they saved England and saved civilization, maintaining with their bodies that barrier which all the legions of Germany, during four years of furious endeavor, have never breached. The Germans thought that the terrible retreat and the tremendous resistance had exhausted the British army. They were wrong, as usual; they are now learning how wrong, at large and in detail.

"The British armies,' writes Sir Douglas Haig, 'having successfully withstood all attacks of the enemy, once more took the offensive in their turn.' In these austere words is conveyed a whole heroic history of extraordinary constancy, immense and incessant effort, and an undefeatable spirit.

"The army has seen the indescribable toils of years of campaigning nearly brought to nothing; had lost much and suffered greatly; yet, under the leadership of Sir Douglas Haig, it plucked up heart, sprang again to work and went on. 'The capture of 75,000 prisoners and 750 guns in the course of four weeks' fighting speaks for the magnitude of your effort and the magnificence of your achievement.' Thus Sir Douglas Haig.

"A soldier's praise is the right guerdon of a soldier. Yet we cannot but conceive that the soldier, being human, would be justified by some acknowledgment of his services sent by the people at home."

A Great Airman.

Among the officers who recently returned to Canada was Capt. McCaul, of the Royal Air Force, who comes from Western Canada. He is a young man, but he wears the D.S.O., Military Cross and bar, and the distinguished Flying Cross, and he is reported by his friends to have been recommended for the V.C. He is home on six months' furlough. He is said to have brought down at least 75 German planes. Lt.-Col. Bishop, regarded as Canada's premier fighting airman, has an authentic record of 72.

Sat Up in Bed To Get Her Breath

Palpitation of the heart, shortness of breath, inability to lie on the left side, feelings as if smothering, oppressed feeling in the chest, dizzy and faint spells, tired weak, worn out feeling, involuntary twitching of the muscles, sleeplessness, restless, etc., all point to the fact that either the heart or nerves, or both, are not what they should be. Any of these conditions should be remedied immediately so as to avoid a complete breakdown of the whole system.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will bring energy to the weakened constitution, strengthen and regulate the heart, and tone up the tired, overstrained nerves.

Mrs. William Steeves, Chemical Road, N.B., writes:— "I have been a great sufferer from nerve troubles and palpitation of the heart, which was so bad I had to sit up in bed to get my breath. I could not lie on my left side at all. I tried doctor after doctor, also several different remedies, but got no help from them. My mother insisted on me trying Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. By the time I had used one box, I was feeling very much better. I took in all three boxes, and now I am in perfect health and can enjoy a good sound sleep, and can lie on my left side without any trouble."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c. a box at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

24-INCH RIFLE WITH RANGE OF 40 MILES PREDICTED

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 13.—Ordnance development during the war has brought cannon makers to the point where the 24-inch rifle is easily practicable, Major F. W. Coe, chief of coast artillery, said, in his annual report. The nominal range of a gun of this size would be forty miles, the report says, but longer ranges for special types are possible is desired."

The limit has not yet been approached in the size of the tractor-drawn artillery, declares General Cote, intimating that a successor to the German "Big Bertha" is to be expected.

"In the case of harbour defences," the report declares, "the existing armament lacks in power when judged by latest standards. In order to provide for the unhampered movements of our own fleets in leaving important harbours it undoubtedly will be necessary in many cases to supplement the existing defences with the highest power, largest calibre guns, placed as far to the front as possible. Recourse will consequently be had to fix emplacements.

Catarrhal Deafness and Head Noises

TELLS SAFE AND SIMPLE WAY TO TREAT AND RELIEVE AT HOME.

If you have catarrh, catarrhal deafness or head noises caused by catarrh, or if phlegm drops in your throat and has caused catarrh of the stomach or bowels you will be glad to know that these distressing symptoms may be entirely overcome in many instances by the following treatment which you can easily prepare in your own home at little cost. Secure from your druggist 1 ounce of Parmint (Double Strength). Take this home and add to it ¼ pint of hot water and a little granulated sugar; stir until dissolved. Take one tablespoonful four times a day. An improvement is sometimes noted after the first day's treatment. Breathing should become easy, while the distressing head noises, headaches, dullness, cloudy thinking, etc., should gradually disappear under the tonic action of the treatment. Loss of smell, taste, defective hearing and mucus dropping in the back of the throat are other symptoms which suggest the presence of catarrh and which may often be overcome by this efficacious treatment. It is said that nearly ninety per cent. of all ear troubles are caused by catarrh and there must, therefore, be many people whose hearing may be restored by this simple, harmless, home treatment.

Out of Their Own Mouths

(By Captain J. A. F. Ozanne.)

For the past few weeks the feelings of all decent-minded people who read the papers have been alternately disgusted and harrowed with the endless story of the sufferings undergone by British prisoners of war in German hands. As horror has succeeded horror and outrage has followed upon outrage, one has found oneself asking tthe question, again and again, "are we really fighting human beings?" The incidents given to the public have been so appalling that, had the public not been prepared by the history of the last four years to believe that the depths to which the Hun can sink in bestiality are as yet unfathomed, people would have thought twice before accepting the official statements. Beaten, starved, tortured, and crucified, such is the daily lot of the British prisoners of war in German hands; and, at the same time, one is told that there are recorded instances of atrocities so appalling that they cannot be made public.

Quite recently the German authorities sought to palliate their crimes by making false accusations as regards the treatment meted out to German prisoners of war. There was a time when the Boche glorified in his iniquity, when his sole reply was, "I have the right to do what I have the power to do." The Allies, however, have changed all that. The Hun sees that the Wheel of Fortune has turned against him and, anxious to escape the odium which must inevitably overwhelm him, he is trying to make excuses. How far such excuses will stand the light of day may be best appreciated by the few extracts from letters written by his own countrymen who are anxious to testify to the good and generous treatment which they have received at the hands of their British captors.

A German prisoner writes from a hospital in Manchester: "I must express myself in great praise of the treatment we received from the Australians. They treated me as a mother treats her child. Also on the journey and here in the hospital the treatment is very good." Is there a British soldier who has been taken prisoner by the Germans can say that "on the journey and in the hospital" the treatment is even good? Everyone in England and in Germany knows how the British wounded were transported in cattle trucks, how they were kept without food during the whole journey and how at each station they were exposed to the cowardly insults of the German mob. It is also known how the German Red Cross sisters made a practice of torturing wounded men by pretending to bring them soup and then pouring it on to the platform in front of them.

Another prisoner writes: "Infantrymen carried me to a shell hole and left me there. When I woke up the English were there and carried me off. The English soldiers handled me better than my own people."

Another German thus describes his experience: "I was astonished at the careful and self-sacrificing treatment we received. You must remember we were prisoners, helpless and yet" (that "yet" reveals more about the Hun mind than many volumes) "they tried to chase away the horrors of the moment by their loving attention. I had lost my gas mask when I was wounded. When I lay on the stretcher, our people shot quite close by with gas. I was in an awful panic, I can't describe it to you. But an English orderly distinguished himself for every time a shell came he drew the rug over my head, although he had quite enough work to do for his own comrades. If they had meant ill with us, we should have perished miserably."

A prisoner writes from hospital in England: "I spent four days with the English soldiers in the trenches, and could not be removed because we were under fire. I was thus able to see the feeling of comradeship which the English soldiers had for us, and the way they cared for and helped us; no German would have done that. We were given everything by them which they could give us."

Finally, a German prisoner writes from hospital: "We have been very well received here, the English sisters are very friendly and the English soldier is a gentleman through and through. We were very civilly and respectfully treated by them."

Just a few short extracts from a sheaf of letters. Many others could be quoted, but these are just samples taken at random. The lies of the German authorities are refuted by Germans themselves.

H. K. Thaw's Return to Be Sougnt Soon By District Attorney

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.— That steps will be taken early next month to seek extradition of Harry K. Thaw from Pennsylvania to New York, where indictments for kidnapping and assault have been found by the Grand Jury, yesterday was announced by District Attorney Swan, following a report made to him by Edwin P. Kilroe, a staff assistant, who on Monday observed Thaw and the condition of ease in which he is said to be living.

It is the contention of the District Attorney that Thaw is not insanse and never was, and much money is being spent to keep him out of the jurisdiction of the New York courts. Information that Thaw, who by order of the Pennsylvania court was committed to a private institution at Kirkbride, Pa., had been permitted to leave the confines of the place, a domain of 100 acres, with swimming pool and other luxuries, reached Mr. Swann and he sent Mr. Kilroe to investigate.

"From November 27 to December 3," Mr. Swan stated after reading his assistant's report, "Thaw was in Pittsburg by permission of the courts, no notice being given to any one, and this permission being granted solely on the application of Thaw. There were no sustaining affidavits annexed to the permit. Thaw is under no restraint at Kirkbride, Dr. Fuller, superintendent of the hospital, informed Mr. Kilroe that he had no power to exercise any restraint over Thaw, and that if Thaw wanted to go out of the institution there was no power vested in the institution to detain him.

"When Mr. Kilroe asked to see Thaw Dr. Fuller declined to let him do so until he first got permission from Thaw's counsel. The latter was telephoned to and he instructed Dr. Fuller not to allow Mr. Kilroe to see Thaw. Later Mr. Kilroe was permitted to see Thaw, but not to speak to him. Mr. Kilroe went to the County Clerk's office and asked to be permitted to inspect the papers upon which Thaw was committed to the institution. His request was refused."

Mr. Kilroe, in Mr. Swan's office, told reporters that on Monday he went to Philadelphia with Detectives Grover Cleveland Brown and August Mayer and John Lind, stenographer.

"I saw the commitment papers after Judge Martin, in the Court of Common Pleas, heard my argument in open court," Mr. Kilroe stated. "Judge Martin told me that he had signed the order permitting Thaw to go to Pittsburg after James Gay Gordon, Thaw's lawyer, presented a letter from Mrs. Thaw, his mother. The letter stated, I was informed, that she would like to have Harry for Thanksgiving. A certificate from a physician also was presented, it stating that Thaw's condition had so moderated that it was safe to let him go and that the trip would do him good.

"Thaw lives a life of ease at the place, and when I saw him he was playing pinochle. He is the picture of health. Thaw frequently has been seen in a Philadelphia restaurant. If any institution in New York tried to conceal the records as the one in Philadelphia did it would be a public scandal here. Philadelphia newspapers telephoned to me to-day and stated that Dr. Fuller and Mr. Gordon denied that I had spoken to them on Monday. I expect to return to Philadelphia for investigation along other lines.

Thaw Has No Liberty Except by Court Order, Says Hospital Head.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Tuesday. — Dr. E. F. Fuller, superintendent of the Pennsylvania Hospital for the Insane, declared to-night that Harry K. Thaw had no liberty whatever, except such as was sanctioned and ordered by the court. "Since Thaw entered this institution," said Dr. Fuller, "he never has been outside except when he went to Pittsburg for Thanksgiving on the order of the court."

VICTORIA'S GIFT TO CANA

By ROLAND HILL

GENERAL SIR ARTHUR CURRIE.

WHAT is the secret of Lieut.-General Sir Arthur Currie's wonderful success? It is a question asked everywhere but in the Canadian corps itself. There the answer would be one of simple blind faith. He has never failed; never let the fighting men of the maple leaf down. Their answer would be: "Because he is the corps commander and we know him and he knows us—and he's human." Perhaps the latter point is one that should come first.

"While we are all longing to get back to our homeland we want no talk of peace until we have won. The sacrifices already made must not be forgotten. Fight it out now, and win we must; if we stick to it and if each one here and in all the Empire does his share." That is part of a letter General Currie recently wrote to a lady living near the little place that was his birthplace, Napperton, Middlesex County, Ontario. It is a sidelight on Currie.

Outside the charmed circle of the corps there are critical men, some of them perhaps have reason to be envious; who give you other reasons for General Currie's success. I once asked a British general who stands high in military councils and who had been praising Currie, and his answer was, I believe, the real reason?

"Currie has made war a business. He has slung the millstones of military tradition overboard and runs the Canadian army on business lines. He is the managing director. His working capital is that of thousands of Canadian lives entrusted to his care. He carefully watches his expenditure and mentally keeps a profit and loss account of each engagement. He can proudly say his balance sheet has never shown a loss and his dividends have been many and regular.—Vimy, Paaschendaele, Amiens, the Hindenburg Line and Cambrai."

To this I would add that he has never, even in the darkest hours, looked upon the Hun as a superman of war. He regards Canadian brains as superior to the slow-moving, machine-like, thought of the Teuton; he has proved that the chivalry behind the Canadian fighting man endows him with more bravery than even the old fighting stock of Germans.

Not very many years ago, for Currie is now only 43, the corps commander used to drill his schoolmates in his sleepy little home town. At eighteen he went out West and taught for a while in the small village school at Sydney, on Vancouver Island. Soldiering was always his hobby, but he gave little thought to the book side of the military game and devoted himself to drill and shooting. Later when he went into business for himself in real estate and insurance in Victoria he kept up the soldiering. For fourteen years he served as volunteer in the garrison artillery at the Canadian port, first as mere private, then as officer and during those days the competition between the regular British garrison at Esquimalt and the "colonists" was very keen, the victory not always going to the regular soldiers. His period with the artillery at an end, the future corps commander continued with the infantry, becoming colonel of a newly raised Highland regiment. In August, 1914, the call to war came and immediately Currie entrained at Vancouver with his "kilties" for Valcartier. When the Canadian army was undergoing its final training at Salisbury Plain Currie was made a brigadier and when the First Division went to France his brigade was regarded as one of the finest in the continent. There was much talk of the Canadians lack of discipline but no reflections were cast on Currie's brigade.

Lieut.-General Currie is the same under all conditions. His giant figure seems almost boyish as he greets you with a genial smile which lights up a face that is almost cherubic. He is so well proportioned you do not notice how huge he is till you stand alongside him and look up at him. His conversation is easy and restrained. He doesn't waste words and first impressions are that he is bashful. He has serene confidence in the ability of his officers and men to do anything he requires of them. He trusts them far more than any Imperial commander trusts even his staff and that trust has never been betrayed, he will tell you proudly. It has helped to make him the idol of the corps.

There is another side to him that some have found to their cost. He is not an easy man if there is trace of slackness or unpardonable failure. In several cases he has shown that he can frown on and punish severely inefficiency. More than one battalion that now has a famous place in Canadian history has been in the shadow of that stern side of the corps commander, but even they would acknowledge that Currie holds the wonderful secret of obtaining, without heroic effort, the best there is in those under him, whether a brigade or divisional commander or subaltern and sergeant.

In modern military tactics General Currie is regarded as a remarkable find and more than once he has been called into the councils of the High Command, not to assist in working out some little scheme the Canadians might be used in, but to help develop some problem on fronts in France, in Italy or Macedonia. At Paaschendaele he changed the whole Imperial plan of attack and regrouped the British artillery to suit his own scheme. He stipulated for a free hand and declared the Canadians would gain the vital position inside of a week. For twelve days other troops had been attempting to win the ridge. Currie said it would take him a week—in five days we had consolidated ourselves on the coveted ridge and the Germans were floundering in the mud instead of us.

In the recent victorious Amiens show the Canadian commander proved himself resourceful and daring. Imperial General Staff officers must have held their breath for hours after our first successful wave but they knew Currie and the Canadians had never failed. For those hours Currie 's two Canadian Divisions were absolutely "in the air." They drove nearly ten miles into the German centre. The corps on the left had been held up by the winding valley of the Somme where the Germans fought desperately. The French who were to have joined up on the right flank were also delayed. To the staff watching the progress of the battle by map at General Headquarters it looked as if the Germans would drive through and cut off the Canadians. But they trusted in Currie's tactics. The Canadian commander had reckoned on such a condition but he knew that delay would be fatal, and along the right flank patrolling the main roads and riding across the fields were the Canadian Motor Machine guns and the Canadian cavalry, practically for the first time working with the corps. It wasn't by accident they were there and the first demonstration the Germans made against the "unprotected flank" was badly beaten off. After that Currie spread out his fighting men like a fan and by attacking the Huns in their rear, helped the French and British to make headway and join up.

When the German line was taken and Currie searched for an advanced place to put the corps staff there was a village which had been German regimental headquarters which seemed suitable.

"Not there," said Currie. "That's just where the Huns would expect us to be." He went miles further ahead and into an old quarry where the German dead showed graphically there had been a terrific fight. You couldn't find it without a minute search and I helped more than one Imperial officer to the spot. But it was an ideal place where tents could be pitched in safety during the hot August nights, and in daytime you could climb the ridge and see miles of the battlefield ahead. The Huns abelled their old quarters right and day little thinking they had been out-guessed.

General Currie is a big man physically and mentally. What will be his future after the war? There are many in the corps and outside who predict he will be heard from in the peaceful years that are coming. He has made himself a warrior and a celebrity among celebrities of war but his calculating mind will adapt itself to peaceful pursuits when the time comes.

SALTING SAVES TIMBER.

Instances Which Show How It Acts as a Preservative.

It was found in replacing a recently burned railroad trestle along the north shore of Great Salt lake, Utah, that the piles were sound after forty-three years of service. These were of local pine and fir, but were found to have been impregnated with lake salt.

The result of this investigation is what started the United States forest service on its recent examinations of the use of salts as a preservative of timber. At another point on the lake some eighteen inch piles, twenty-nine years old, have been similarly preserved with salt, which has penetrated to the center. Timbers in the Southern Pacific railroad trestles across the lake, placed in 1902, appear as good as when driven, and have been preserved above the water line by salt spray dashed upon them. The first transcontinental telegraph line, which was built before the first railroad, extended west from Salt Lake City through the then prosperous mining camps of Eureka, Austin and others.

When the railroad was built the telegraph line was transferred to this right of way, and the old poles were sawed off at the ground. A recent examination of the butts left in the ground in the salt desert near Fish springs, Utah, showed that after the fifty years since the poles were cut off the butts were perfectly sound. It has been common practice in the Salt Lake valley to preserve poles by putting about seventy-five pounds of salt in the ground around the butts.—Engineering News.

Child Deformities.

It is an old saying that a man is only as good as his feet. Babies should go barefooted until they begin to walk and should walk barefooted as much as possible, of course, under suitable conditions. Sandals are always better than shoes, and shoes should always be laced, never buttoned, says the Mother's Magazine. The toe-out walk is bad because it puts the weight on the heel and tends to produce bad postures and flatfoot, so the baby should be taught to walk straight footed. Deformities of the foot include all possible positions in which a foot can be placed. Some exist from birth; others are due to infantile paralysis, palsy, high heels, improper shoes, overweight, general weakness and the inherited diseases that cause other acquired deformities already described. The most frequent error concerning them is in flatfoot, which women commonly attribute to rheumatism. Some foot deformities require surgery. Many yield to manipulation or special apparatus. It is the duty of every mother to give her child the benefit of a physician's advice and treatment, which in almost all cases of deformity will make life happier for the child and in some measure remove the handicap under which it must otherwise struggle as a cripple for life.

Was Troubled With BOILS FOR SIX MONTHS.

From the days of Job to the present time, boils have been one of the greatest afflictions of the human race.

Very few people escape from having them at some time.

All the poulticing and lancing you may do won't cure them and stop more coming.

Boils are caused by bad blood bursting out, and the bad blood must be made pure before the boils will disappear.

Burdock Blood Bitters is the greatest blood purifier known. It cleanses the system, and purifies the blood by removing every particle of foul material from the system, and when this is done, never another boil comes and health and strength are permanently restored.

Mr. C. H. Bridges, 470 Barton St. E., Hamilton, Ont., writes:—"I was troubled with boils for about six months and tried several remedies without any relief until I tried Burdock Blood Bitters, and the effect has been wonderful. After using two bottles, I was rid of them all. I feel like a new man; my appetite is better, and I sleep better than I have for years. I can highly recommend B. B. B. to all who are troubled as I was."

Burdock Blood Bitters has been on the market for the past 40 years, and manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Sponge Muscles.

Rubber sponge muscles is a vivid description of a new method of filling up a hole in a person's body caused by accident or perhaps by a surgical operation. Some operations leave a hole that in size is serious, and that can be repaired with difficulty—if at all—by one of half a dozen surgical methods, and the only time the rubber sponge method has been tried on persons so far is after such operations. A rubber sponge accidentally left in a wound was found months afterward with new flesh grown all through its cavities. Experiments that followed during the past two years show that at first a rubber sponge in a wound causes a swelling, but soon the flesh begins to work through all the interstices until the sponge becomes a solid plug, which does not seem to cause inconvenience of any kind. Lately the idea has been used to obtain the flesh plug needed after some operations.—Saturday Evening Post.

Rheumatism.

There is a well defined and reasonable idea that the germs of rheumatism and asthma are identical, and for these heroic doses of iodide of potassium are the best known destroyers. Those who suffer with either of the diseases, which are enough to make the victim's life scarcely worth living, might with profit try this remedy. A famous prescription, which has been very successful in every case of rheumatism in which it has been tried, has iodide of potassium for its basis.

An exceedingly obstinate and painful case of rheumatism of a slightly inflammatory sort has been relieved and put on the highroad to a cure by the use of compresses wet with iodide of potassium in saturated solution. This solution is made by dissolving in any given quantity of water all the crystals that it will take. It is simple, inexpensive, easily prepared and well worth trying.

Hopes Women Will Adopt This Habit As Well As Men

Glass of hot water each morning helps us look and feel clean, sweet, fresh.

Happy, bright, alert—vigorous and vivacious—a good clear skin; a natural rosy complexion and freedom from illness are assured only by clean, healthy blood. If only every woman and likewise every man could realize the wonders of the morning inside bath, what a gratifying change would take place.

Instead of the thousands of sickly anaemic-looking men, women and girls with pasty or muddy complexions; instead of the multitudes of "nerve wrecks," "rundowns," "brain fags" and pessimists we should see a virile, optimistic throng of rosy-cheeked people everywhere.

An inside bath is had by drinking, each morning before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour fermentations and poisons, thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Those subject to sick headache, biliousness, nasty breath, rheumatism, cold; and particularly those who have a pallid, sallow complexion and who are constipated very often are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store which will cost but a trifle but is sufficent to demonstrate the quick and remarkable change in both health and appearance awaiting those who practice internal sanitation. We must remember that inside cleanliness is more important than outside, because the skin does not disturb impurities to contaminate the blood, while the pores in the thirty feet of bowels do.

Water With Meals.

Tests on a poison squad have shown that the common belief that drinking much water at mealtimes tends to make one fat is apparently without foundation. Students were given carefully controlled diets for fixed periods, and every drop of water and ounce of food was carefully measured and recorded. After a preliminary period they were required to drink water copiously at every meal, and then followed another period during which they had little or nothing to drink with their meals. The compared results showed that in some instances there was a very slight increase in the utilization of fat in the food during the water drinking period, but this was about balanced by negative results in other cases, so that the final conclusion was that the amount of fat and carbohydrates utilized by the body from food eaten was apparently uninfluenced by the amount of water taken at mealtimes.

A DANGEROUS HABIT.

Cordite Chewing Practiced by Munition Workers.

When a boy of sixteen working in a munitions factory was taken ill, it was thought that he had been drinking. The suggestion was denied, however, and it was proved that the lad never touched alcohol; but the cause of the mistake lay in the fact that he had the habit of chewing cordite — the smokeless explosive so largely used in the manufacture of small arms.

Cordite is a very stimulating drug, and quickly revives weary nerves, besides being extremely attractive to the taste; but the mere fact that it is composed chiefly of nitro-glycerine and guncotton makes it a most deadly and dangerous drug and quickly enslaves its victims.

There was a rather memorable instance of some soldiers discovering the stimulating effects of cordite during the South African war; but the drug was really unknown until the last two or three years.

To-day the habit of chewing cordite is quite common, according to a writer in London Answers, especially among all sections of munition workers whose work brings them into contact with the explosive. Medical men in munition areas know the prevalence of the habit, the hold it has over the workers, and the harm which it is doing its victims, particularly among women and girls.

Many munition workers start chewing cordite in complete ignorance of the harm which it is likely to do them, while many who start the habit so quickly become dependent upon it that they have not sufficient strength of will to give it up.

More than one munitioniere has said that chewing a bit of cordite occasionally enables them to carry on at hard work when otherwise they would have had to give in.

It is only afterward, when the habit goes from bad to worse, that they realize their foolishness.

There is no denying the fact that cordite recreates force and energy in a way equaled by no other stimulant; but it is a wholly harmful drug, which eats away both the mental and physical systems — a drug which should never be allowed to gain the mastery. In many cases, too, cordite gives its victims the appearance of drunkenness; more than one person had been thought to be drunk when really they had been chewing cordite. —Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Grocer's Mistake.

"I had my dyspepsia almost cured once," said Crabbe.

"But you couldn't stand the diet, eh?" asked Flabbe.

"Well, it was this way," explained Crabbe. "Dr. Pliter advised me to eat chopped oat cakes. I ordered a box, and after eating them a week I felt fine. When Bridget said the cakes were gone I had her bring me in the box so that I could get the name and order more, but I never placed the order."

"Why not?" inquired Flabbe. "The cakes were helping you."

"I found," said Crabbe, looking sick at the recollection, "that I had been eating dog biscuit."—Ginger.

Golden Text—If ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. Matt. 6:14.

1. Verses 1-4. Is it ever wise or otherwise, and why, when our hearts are greatly moved to give vent to our feelings before strangers?

2. Which is better when in great joy or sorrow, to repress our feelings, or give vent to them, as Joseph did?

3. How would you justify Joseph for putting his brothers through such torture as he had done? (See Gen. 43 and 44.)

4. Verses 1-4. Let this scene impinge itself upon your imagination, and then say what the thoughts and feelings of these men were as they stood before Joseph at this dramatic moment?

5. Does a twenty-two year old sin when resurrected give the conscience the same acute sense of guilt as a sin recently committed? Give your reasons.

6. What was it at that moment which brought to Joseph such intense feeling that he could not keep from sobbing aloud?

7. Verse 5. Was Joseph's advice that they "Be not grieved nor angry with yourselves" wise or otherwise, and why?

8. What is the evidence that God actually did send Joseph into Egypt?

9. How much did God have to do with Joseph's brothers selling him into Egypt?

10. Verses 6, 7. What other examples can you give of God using evil things to bring about good results?

11. In the event that Joseph had not been sold into Egypt would God probably have brought him there in some other way?

12. Joseph, or no Joseph, I have no doubt the famine in Egypt would have been the same, but what would have been the result if Joseph had not been there?

13. Verse 8. Is it a part of God's plan in nature that evil shall work out good, and that pain is essential in order to the highest joy? Give your reasons. (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by members of the club.)

14. Would you say or not and why, that Joseph's brothers were as guilty as if Joseph had lived and died a slave?

15. Verses 9-13. Why should you say or not, that as a rule, the love of grown up sons is as warm for their parents as when they were children?

16. Verses 9-13. Why should it be obligatory upon grown up sons to tenderly care for their aged parents if the latter so need?

17. Would you say, and if so, why, that a good father rejoices as much in the success of a grown up son, as in his own success?

18. Verses 14, 15. What was the special affinity or preference of Joseph for Benjamin?

19. What can you say in commendation of grown up brothers and sons telling with tears how much they love one another?

Wearing back-to-Eden costumes costs $2 in little London, as Clifford Read and George Dent have discovered. They had been bathing, and on coming out of the water thought gathering brushwood and building a fire of more immediate importance than putting on their clothes.

What Week End Guests Bring.

According to Harrison Rhodes' account in Harper's Magazine, week end guests in high society bring—

Their own motorcars.

Their own maids and valets.

In at least one case, her own boiled rice, dried toast, Bulgarian sour milk and other fixings, all in an especially designed silver-gilt dinner pail.

Frequently their own bed linen, pillows and bath towels.

One lady, known to many visiting lists, if it happens that she is going to exceed the week end limit, brings her own cook and butler.

There is a whisper, not to be credited to Mr. Rhodes, that some of these guests bring also their own welcome.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES

The Public Library has just received consignments of books to the number of about three hundred volumes. Lists of these will be given at intervals in the papers. They comprise all classes of literature and will be available for lending to the public during the present month. It does not necessarily follow that the lists that appear in the paper will be the books that will be immediately available for lending. These lists are taken in order as the books are received, but as much care as possible will be taken to make the books available for giving out correspond to the published lists. There are over a hundred books of fiction in the selection, many of them just published.

The heights of lace boots "should not exceed 8½ inches," it was said, while the manufacture of button boots, as well as "needle-toed lasts," should be discouraged.

The Gibraltar Straits Tunnel.

Interest has lately revived in the scheme for a tunnel beneath the Straits of Gibraltar, which has, like that for a railway link between England and France, made an appeal to engineers for a generation or more. Some of the technical aspects of the project have been under discussion before the French Society of Civil Engineers, and it does not appear to be thought that there are any abnormal difficulties on the engineering side. Owing to the depth of water and character of the sea bed and the underlying strata, it would be necessary to construct such a tunnel at a depth, it is believed, of some 840 metres; and the length between Tarifa, the suggested point of departure on the Spanish side of the straits, and either of the alternative points of emergency on the Morocco coast, would be about 15½ miles. It is assumed by the advocates of the scheme that the cost of construction would not exceed £10,000,000, but necessary port improvements would call for the expenditure of an additional £4,000,000. There can be no doubt that the link of the European and African railway systems would give a great stimulus to French and Spanish trade, and on the assumption that the tunnel beneath the Straits of Dover is constructed, the tunnel would provide over the Trans-African railway a through route between England and South Africa. The scheme now put forward by M. Henri Bressler does not differ in its essential aspects from that planned by Berlier twenty years ago, but it is felt that the case for the tunnel has been strengthened in the interval, and it is believed that the capital could now be found without seeking any financial aid from either the French or Spanish Governments.—Engineering Supplement of the London Times.

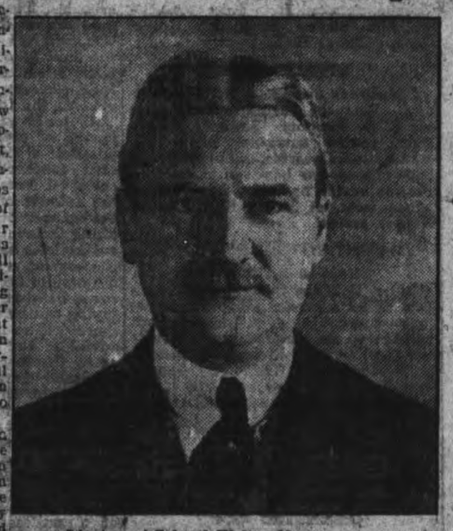
Demobilization of Troops

THE demobilization of the Canadian Expeditionary Force is perhaps the most important problem now confronting the Dominion Government, and the transportation of the troops from the port of landing to their home destination is a work which will require skilful handling. On reaching Canadian soil, after their hard fought battles in foreign countries, the veterans will deserve all the consideration that can be given to them.



Lieutenant-Colonel Walter Maughan.

It was therefore a wise decision on the part of the Dominion Government when they decided that the Canadian Railway War Board should appoint a committee that will make all the arrangements necessary for the transportation of the soldiers through Canada.

The War Board so constituted the committee that it is representative of the three principal Canadian railways. Ever since the beginning of the war officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway have been conspicuous as leaders in the country's patriotic efforts, and now Lieutenant-Colonel Walter Maughan, Assistant General Passenger Agent of the C. P. R., has been chosen as chairman of the committee that is to undertake the responsibility for the train transportation of the soldiers to their places of abode in Canada. Lieutenant-Colonel Maughan's long experience and his thorough knowledge of railroad affairs make him thoroughly qualified to fill the position for which he has been selected.

In March, 1892, at the age of sixteen years, Walter Maughan joined the staff of the Canadian Pacific Railway as a clerk in the Toronto offices. In September of the same year he was transferred to Hamilton to act in a similar capacity. In 1895 he was again brought back to the Toronto offices, and in March, 1897, he became city passenger agent in the Queen City. On November 1st, 1913, he became assistant district passenger agent in Toronto. One month later he was promoted to become assistant general passenger agent in Montreal.

Lieutenant-Colonel Maughan is representing the C. P. R. on the newly formed committee. Mr. H. H. Melanson will represent the Canadian Government Railways, and Mr. C. W. Johnston the Grand Trunk Railway.

By a co-ordination of effort it is believed that the representatives of the three big Canadian railways can so regulate railway transportation arrangements as to insure the safe and comfortable return of the Canadian soldier men to their homes. The headquarters of the committee will be in Ottawa, where the committee will be in direct touch with the Canadian Government.

A preliminary meeting of the committee was recently held in Montreal, when the Minister of Militia was represented by Colonel E. E. Clarke, Director General of Supplies and Transportation. The problem of transportation was discussed in all its phases, and the committee will leave nothing undone to ensure safe transit, and feeding facilities of the highest character for the Canadian soldier men who so bravely answered to the call of duty when the country was in danger.

"SOLDIERS FIRST" IS C. P. R. SLOGAN

Troop trains with returning soldiers are to be given preference over all other trains, including regular passenger trains on the C. P. R., in so far as is consistent with safety, according to a circular just issued by Vice-President A. D. MacTier. This was the rule on the C. P. R. when our soldiers were hurrying to the front, and it is to be the rule now that they are returning to their homes. "What is particularly desired," says the circular, "is that all officers and employees concerned shall, in so far as possible, place themselves in the position of the father, mother, wife, sister, or other relative of the returning soldier, and deal with them as they would wish to be dealt with under similar conditions.

"All this being accomplished, it will add substantially to the welcome the company desires to give to returned soldiers, as well as to the comfort and convenience of relatives and friends who desire to welcome them."

In order that relatives and friends desiring to meet troop trains should have information as to the hour of arrival very particular instructions are given. "Station staffs," says the circular, "at destination points should be fully and promptly advised of the expected time of arrival of troop trains, with all particulars available as to the names of steamships from which the passengers come, and any other known details. This information should be promptly and regularly posted on station bulletin boards and corrected from time to time as may be necessary. Operators should keep in close touch with the movement of the trains so that the information posted may be up to the minute. Train enquiry clerks should be at all times fully informed in connection with the trains and their movement, and they, as well as other station staff concerned, will be expected to deal courteously and patiently with all enquirers, giving them correctly and clearly the fullest information possible in response to their enquiries.

In the operation of C. P. R. trains, the troop train is to be considered first. In the event of a troop train locomotive breakdown on the road, the locomotive which can be made most quickly available, even if taken from a regular passenger train, is to be used to handle the troop train, so it will incur the least possible

FINE FORM OF COURAGE.

Shown By the Men Physically Afraid Who Are Moral Heroes.

There is a familiar story of one soldier sneering at another because of his evident trembling just before a battle. The one thus attacked replied: "Yes, and if you trembled as much as I do you would not go at all." This incident is an illustration of the essential difference between physical and moral bravery, and also of the fact that a man may be physically afraid and yet be a moral hero. The present war has done much to emphasize this distinction, which is one of the greatest value and the most vital importance in many phases of life. It will be abundantly worth while calling attention to the power of moral courage as illustrated by the war.

Bishop Taylor Smith, Chaplain General to the British Forces, preaching the other day in Westminster Abbey, told a striking story of self-sacrifice:

A wounded Australian soldier in a military hospital, who was asked about his home and family in Australia, said:

"There were six of us lads and mother. We all enlisted, and left mother alone. It was her wish. She said she hoped no boy of hers would hold back when the Mother Country called. And now five of us are asleep, buried on the battlefields of France, and I am the only one left." There was a few moments of silence, and then he added. "But I have not told you the worst. When I got this wound some one cabled to my mother that I had been killed, and that telegram killed her."

Very similar is the testimony of a leading Baptist minister in England, Rev. F. C. Spurr, who has had abundant opportunities of gaining experiences of camp life since the early days of the war. After four years he observes the vast change that has come over camps and huts. Instead of the rollicking, gay, careless, and confident attitude of men in those days, Mr. Spurr says that grim determination, hope long deferred, and grave questionings about the future have arrived. Here is one characteristic incident:

The youths of 18 were the most cheerful; the men of 47 the least so. One, a chemist, drew from his pocket a wallet, containing a photograph of his wife, his children, and his grandchild, and he said: "I feel the uprooting more keenly than I can say; I am dazed. I can scarcely realize what has happened; but"—with a sob—"it is for that little fellow and others like him that I am here, and I hope I'll go through like a man. I am afraid I am not of much use for fighting, but I suppose I shall have a job I can do." And thus it was with more than one man who had passed his 45th milestone.

Nothing could be finer than the moral heroism evinced in these stories. They show beyond question what has been so often and abundantly proved, that the present war is unique in the way in which the cause of righteousness and liberty for which the Allies are fighting has brought out some of the noblest and truest elements of human life, which would have been impossible in a war of aggression, greed, and tyranny.

A Vision of Peace.

May Not Notify the Relatives

Military Department Likely to Introduce New System of Transmitting Names of Returning Soldiers.

OTTAWA, Dec. 13. — Authorities here contend that the notification of next of kin of the arrival on the seaboard of returning men is becoming a task of great magnitude. In the days when men arrived by hundreds the task was a fairly simple one. Now, however, that they are arriving at a rate of 5,000 a week the work of wiring the names to the various Soldiers' Aid Commissions is fraught with very considerable difficulty.

The nominal rolls of the men by districts are prepared on the vessel and handed to the disembarkation officials on arrival. They are then wired to the Soldiers' Aid Commissions at the various points, and these commissions notify relatives.

Fifteen Words to Each.

The notifications contain not only the name of the man, but the name and address of the person he wants notified, so that for each man who arrives from ten to fifteen words must be wired.

This meant that for the arrival of the Aquitania, numbering about 5,000, over 50,000 words had to be sent over the wires to the whole country, not to Toronto alone, as reported. The telegraphing of the Toronto names alone, it is claimed, took four operators twelve hours to complete. The same task will have to be performed on the arrival of the Olympic.

German Red Tape.

Here is a story from the German Muenchener Post, which illustrates the elaborate German "red tape" system during the Great War and throws light on the German food situation:

"One day an old man came to the municipal food administration and asked for a bread ration ticket, as he was starving. After all the particulars had been taken, he received the reply that the matter would be investigated. The man died the following day of exhaustion. Five days later the food administration sent two loaves of bread to the house with the explanation that one loaf was for the last eight days and the other one for the coming week. The chief of the food administration was unpleasantly surprised on hearing the report that the man had been dead five days of exhaustion after he had been supplied with a loaf of bread for the last week."

The German Democracy Bulletin, of New York, announces:

"His Majesty William, some time before he fled to Holland, conferred the order of the Black Eagle on his court chaplain, Dr. Dryander. Dr. von Dryander, if you please. This is believed to be the first time that a clergyman has received the highest order which heretofore belonged only to army leaders and royalties. It is, however, the first time that a divine had to pray so often and so fervently to the special God of the Kaiser to make the German people believe in a final victory."

A Likely Story!

Valuable works of art belonging to museums and private owners in the regions of Cambrai, Douai and Valenciennes, now in the hands of the Germans, will be returned undamaged to their owners after the war. This announcement is made in a German Government wireless message received here. These works of art have, under the orders of the supreme army command, been sent to a place of safety, to save them from destruction.

Wants Tirpitz Tried.

Says the other Maximilian, whose surname is Harden, "I hope von Tirpitz will be put on trial as soon as possible. There must be limits for what human beings can do to one another." There are, outside the zone of German influence. There will be hereafter even inside of it, if the war settles anything.

Main Duty of Salvage Control

(By Lieut. R. S. M. Sturges)

Owing to the ever-increasing range and importance of salvage work in the British Army in France, it has recently been found necessary to appoint a staff of officers, which may devote its whole attention to the subject.

The duties of the Controller of Salvage and his staff are in the main advisory rather than executive. The Controller does not command the salvage personnel which is responsible for the carrying out of routine work in the field; it is only where a special organization is set up to clear a particular area which has passed altogether out of the zone of active operations, that the Controller of Salvage assumes executive authority.

The main duty of Salvage Control is to co-ordinate the salvage work which is carried on in the departmental workshops. One workshop for examvle may have a surplus of scrap metal for which it has no use, whereas another may be short of scrap metal. The Salvage Controller's department, in keeping in constant touch with the different workshops and noting materials they require, and what they possess in excess of their requirments is able to step in and put them in touch with French manufacturers and with the French Government, and it is therefore able to advise the Quartermaster-General as to the disposal of surplus material in this direction.

Apart from this most important branch of the work of Salvage Control, which is carried on by representatives of the Controller in the different base towns, there is also a permanent staff at General Headquarters which deals with the various other duties of the eepartment.

There are, for example the collection of statistics and the keeping of accounts. Each Corps and each Headquarters on the lines of communication receives weekly accounts from the Salvage officers on its own area; these accounts are summarised and forwarded to the Controller of Salvage in the form if a weekly return. This letter shows the number and nature of articles received and disposed of at the salvage dumps in the area concerned. Statistics are also collected from the base depots as to the amount of material received and the manner of its disposal. By calculating the cost of repair of the different articles and balancing it against the cost of replacing such articles, it is possible for the Controller to discover in what directions the greatest saving can be effected. By this means therefore, he is able to offer valuable advice to the Quartermaster-General as to the most productive and most profitable methods of dealing with salvage in all its forms.

A second branch of the Salvage Control department is concerned with the prosecution of the Salvage campaign among the troops. It is on the co-operation of the troops in the field that the success of the work in its initial stages, (i.e. the recovery of waste material from the battle fields) ultimately depends, and it is of the greatest importance that the men should realize the necessity of contributing to the work. Pamphlets are therefore written and distributed among the troops, explaining briefly and clearly the importance of salvage work and of the advantage to be derived therefrom. This branch is also responsible for the many notices and posters on this subject which are to be seen in the canteens and by the roadside in France, such as "what Have You Salved To-day?" and the poster depicting a foaming glass of beer inscribed "Salve now and Keep the Price of Beer Down."

But perhaps the most interesting branch of the Salvage Controller's department is the experimental one, which deals mainly with the discovery of by-products in apparently waste material and with the most economical methods by which they may be extracted. On this work a chemical expert and a skilled engineer are constantly engaged, and on the experimental ground some of the results of their researches may be seen in actual operation.

There are, for instance, samples of the simplest forms of receptacle in which bones may be boiled for the recovery of fats, and of easily constructed devices for the extraction of solder from tins. The former consist merely of tanks raised above a brick fire-place; the latter include brick kilns of a beehive pattern, in which the tins are burned and the solder run off, or again a length of exploded metal raised above sloping trough of corrugated iron in such way that the solder drips from the burning tins through the expanded metal, on which they rest, into the trough prepared for it.

Other exhibits include an ingenious but simple deivce for cutting the ends off biscuit tins for the sake of the solder contained in the joints; a tin straw colored canister made from old biscuit tins for carrying hot food up the line; a strip of hut flooring, not unlike asphalt, made from a mixture of pitch from unserviceable smoke candles and sawdust; a pot of fireproof paint made from Sodium Silicate, which is a by-product of the manufacture of hydragen for military balloons, etc.

According to the results of these experiments, the Controller of Salvage is able to advise the Quartermaster-General of the uses to which various kinds of waste material can at once most profitably and most economically be put; and steps are taken to ensure that the different processes and devices are made known to, and used by, the units in the field.

Thus in every one of its branches the Salvage Control department is of practical assistance to the Quartermaster-General in the campaign that is being carried on against every form of waste throughout the British Armies in France. It is in no small measure due to the activities of this department that the phrase "Wastage of War" is losing much of the significance that it once possessed.

A S[illegible]

In the United States a soldier wife can not be turned out of house because she can not pay rent if the rent is no more than $40 month. This is covered in the "moratorium bill" recently passed by Congress. The courts, however, have authority to [illegible] circumstances into account and will not let the law be used to defraud a landlord if the tenant is perfectly able to pay.

People who don't mind their own business, bring more misery into families, societies and churches than everything else. They turn the pleasant peaceful stream of good will into ground where angels would even fear to tread. Now, minding one's own business is the very best remedy for the itching ears that are never satisfied with hearing and the busy tongue that hurries to speak cruel words. Minding your own business will turn your attention to self, and you will forget to watch so closely the shortcomings of others; it will make peaceful homes, happy neighbours, and quiet consciences; and you will be able to realize and more fully comprehend the truth spoken in holy writ, "Blessed are the Peacemakers."

Asphodel Couple Celebrate Their 50th Anniversary

A Number of Peterboro Friends Were Present at the Festivities.

On Dec. 5th, Mr. and Mrs. John Fitzpatrick of Asphodel, celebrated the 50th anniversary of their wedding. They were married Nov. 3, 1868; on account of the influenza epidemic the celebration was postponed until Thursday last. The event was remarkable that there were present not only the bride and bridegroom of 50 years ago, but also the groomsman and bridesmaid, Mr. Patrick Fitzpatrick, brother of the bridegroom and Mrs. Honora Moher, sister of the bride.

Mass in thanksgiving was sung for them at St. Paul's church at 9.30 o'clock. Dinner was served afterwards at Mr. and Mrs. Fitzpatrick's home and a most enjoyable afternoon spent by a large gathering of relatives and friends. Four daughters were present, Sister M. Inez, of St. Joseph's Convent, Peterborough; Mrs. Cornelius Quinlan, of Norwood; Mrs. Maurice O'Leary, of Douro, and Mrs. Elerick White, of Peterborough; four sons, Philip, Michael, Joseph and John, of Norwood and twelve grandchildren. Sister Josephine of St. Joseph's Hospital, Peterborough, daughter of the bridesmaid, was also present.

To mark the day a beautiful set of gold vestments was presented to St. Paul's Church by Mr. and Mrs. Fitzpatrick's children. The vestments were used for the first time at the Mass on Thursday morning.

Mr. Fitzpatrick has always taken a deep interest in parish affairs. He enjoys the distinction of having drawn, the winter before his marriage, the first load of stone for the building of St. Paul's Church. And it has been remarked during the past few years how well he took his place beside the younger men in the work being done on the church grounds.

His participation in municipal affairs has been no less active. For four years he was a member of the Asphodel Township Council, and for five years Deputy Reeve and member of the County Council, which offices he filled very acceptably.

President Wilson Will Arrive in Paris To-day

Mayor of Brest Saluted Wilson as the "Messenger of Justice and Peace"—A Riot of Colour.

(Special to Examiner.)

BREST, December 14. — (By Government Wireless.) — President Wilson was given a vociferous welcome as he rode through the streets of Brest yesterday afternoon from the pier to the railway station. Once on board the special train, the President left immediately for Paris.

(By Fred J. Ferguson.)
(United Press.)

BREST, December 14. — The George Washington dropped its anchor at 1.36 yesterday. As the liner completed her historic voyage, a launch bearing the official welcoming the presidential flag. As they Colonel House, General Bliss, General Pershing, Admiral Benson, Admiral Wilson, and the President's daughter, Miss Margaret. They remained on board until the President and his personal party came ashore.

FIRED A SALUTE.

The President and Mrs. Wilson left the George Washington in a tug flying the presidential flag. As they neared the landing slip the warships and the shore batteries fired a salute of twenty-one guns, and a band struck up "The Star-Spangled Banner."

The brilliant sunlight brought the huge replica of the Statue of Liberty in the city into sharp relief, and turned the flags and bunting into a riot of color. The hills rising from the water front were crowded with Breton women and girls in their quaint native costumes.

The official reception committee was headed by Mayor Hervagault. The mayor in welcoming President Wilson, saluted him as "The Messenger of Justice and Peace."

Vienna Facing Cold and Famine

Desperate Case of German-Austrian Capital, Isolated by Racial Antagonisms.

NEUTRAL ENVOYS' PLEA.

Swiss and Swedish Ministers to Interocede With Czechs—Officials Want Our Troops.

BERNE, Dec. 14.—Vienna, formerly one of the most brilliant capitals in Europe, is now a spectral city. From being the capital of a powerful monarchy it is reduced to the position of the capital of a small German-Austrian republic. It has lost its raison d'etre, and practically possesses now far less political power than Munich. By the collapse of the empire Vienna is left stranded, yet it cannot change its fare, cannot adapt itself to a more humble role in a day.

The cosmopolitan population of this derelict capital numbers 2,300,000, while the total population of the new State of German-Austria, including even the still disputed territories, is barely 8,000,000. Economically, German-Austria simply cannot maintain Vienna in its present form. The capital drew its life from the big, complex economic system which is now rent asunder. German-Austria has no coal to feed the Viennese industries, street railways, and lighting apparatus, nor has it nearly enough food to keep the Viennese population from starvation. Its food supplies are drawn largely from Hungary, and its coal from Bohemia, both of which countries are now in open or concealed conflict with German-Austria.

Vienna is in a state of siege and is dying of starvation. Every day fresh reductions are made in the allowance of gas and electric light. Not only the theatres and motion picture houses, but the hospitals are closed because there is no coal to light or warm them. Shops close at 5 p.m., street car service is reduced, only a few trains are running, and the danger is very real that unless relief is forthcoming the trains will stop, and all factories will close within a fortnight or so.

As to the food shortage, it is only Petrograd and Moscow that can supply a parallel to the present wretched situation in Vienna. The population is too miserable to care about politics. There was no particular revolution in Vienna. The city was simply deserted by the monarchy, which betrayed it, and by the nationalities which suffered under the monarchy's corrupt rule. German-Austria is not so much a State as a forsaken remnant of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy—bewildered, isolated, not knowing where to turn.

Twins Joined in Body Appear in New York Court

NEW YORK, Dec. 14. — "Let the children take the stand," said Justice Benedict quite unexpectedly recently in the Brooklyn Supreme Court.

Whereupon Lucio and Simplicio Godino, whose undetermined age has much to do with the justice's interest in them, slipped nimbly from their seat in the court-room and, Lucio walking naturally, Simplicio hustling along backward, climbed into the witness chair, sitting back to back. It was the face of Lucio that was directed toward Justice Benedict. Simplicio disinteresteldy rested his cheek on his hand and swung his feet idly as he looked out at the spectators.

They are twins, joined together at the back of the spine, and were a popular attraction at Coney Island last summer until agents of the Society for the prevention of Cruelty to Children intervened and, questioning their age, caused them to be sent from there to the care of Theodora Yangco, the official delegate of the Phillippines in congress. Then charges of improper guardianship were made by the society and it was in connection with those proceedings that the twins were in court.

In the court-room when the twins were summoned before the justice was their father, Leonico Godino, who had come all the long way from Manila because, he said, he loved his children and wanted to take them back home with him. Whether they are to go with their parent will be determined by Justice Benedict.

The representatives of the Children's Society alleged the twins are only 11 years of age. Senor Godino denied that and testified they were born March 2, 1902, in the Island of Samar, Philippines. It was the birthplace which gave them the exhibition name of Samar Twins. Their mother is dead, Senor Godino told the Justice, while he has remarried.

"I love them," said the father, using the patois of the islands, "and I want to give them my care." He testified he is earning 15 pecos ($7.50) a day as a cabman in Manila, and that he can give them a good home. While they were exhibited publicly, Senor Godino said, he received $50 weekly. The money was sent back by Eduardo Aciao, the twins' uncle, who brought them here in 1915.

"Where were you born" asked William A. Robinson, one of the lawyers in the case.

"At Sulat, Samar," promptly replied Lucio, in a voice that showed no trace of Spanish accent. He said his "father was kind and loving" and that he wants "to be with father." To which, as the Justice peered anxiously over Lucio's shoulder, Simplicio nodded affirmatively.

Replying to other questions, Lucio —with affirmative nods from Simplicio, showing he agreed with what his brother was saying — added that he and his brother had studied "arithmetic, Bible, history, catechism, geography, reading and writing." Simplicio, with a show of dissatisfaction that his brother should have forgotten, vouchsafed the information that they also had written letters on a typewriter.

Mr. Yangco, who is head of a steamship company bearing his name, said he was deeply interested in the twins' welfare and was ready to assume their guardianship and take them into his home. He said both were musically inclined and that he had a baby grand piano installed for them in his home in Washington. He didn't explain how they managed to sit at it.

The case was then adjourned.

GRAIN MARKET

Taking their cue from the cash corn situation, the option markets acted very strong, advancing 3c. between the high and low and closing strong at 2 7-8c. up. A statement sent out to the effect that supplies are below domestic requirements gave every encouragement to the bulls in the market. Oats were sympathetically strong in the options, thought the cash oats situation appears to be by no means strong, cash quotations ranging from an eighth to 5-8c. lower. Other grains steady, and the market dull.

CATTLE MARKET

Cattle prices during the week have held pratcically steady with last week, except in the case of bulls, which suffered a sharp decline in the latter part of the week. There has been a good active trade for cattle of anything like quality for the Christmas trade, the large packing houses making heavy purchases to carry them through for both local and out side demand. The proportion of choice or fancy quality Christmas beef cattle, in proportion to the total receipts for the week, has not been quite up to the average of former years, either as to quality or number. The high price of feed and the steady drain on the supplies of well finished animals for many months past, and mostly at high prices, has pretty nearly exhausted the supply of finished cattle left in the country. The result has been that though the receipts of cattle have been large in the past two weeks, buyers have found some difficulty in procuring as many of the desired quality of cattle as they had room for. A very large proportion of the total offerings have been of very poor quality, and in such numbers as to produce on several days rather badly congested markets. The consequence has been a wide range between the high prices which have been paid for the best Christmas beef steers and heifers, and in particular for the "baby" beefs, and the comparatively lower levels for the common and medium qualities. There has been a steady demand for canners at good prices.

Choice veal calves have held high and firm.

Choice quality lambs and light sheep steady, but an easier market at the end of the week for heavy stuff.

The tendency of the hog market during the week has been weaker, and closing weak at 50c. lower than the opening prices.

Cattle Receipts.

Union Stock Yards—Total receipts this week 578 cars, with 9,237 cattle, 563 calves, 9,302 hogs, and 6,782 sheep and lambs.

City Cattle Market—50 cars, with 671 cattle, 503 sheep and lambs, 394 hogs, 30 calves and 23 horses.

MME. F. GAREAU

153 Papineau Ave., Montreal.

"For three years, I suffered great pain in the lower part of my body, with swelling or bloating. I saw a specialist, who carefully examined me and gave me several tonics to take, which did not help me. Then he told me I must undergo an operation. This, I refused to permit.

I heard about 'Fruit-a-tives' and the wonderful results it was giving because this medicine is made from fruit juices, so decided to try it.

The first box gave great relief; and I continued the treatment, taking six boxes more. Now, my health is excellent — I am free of pain and swelling—and I give 'Fruit-a-tives' my warmest thanks".

HERE'S THE RIGHT PRINCIPLE

Enunciated by Englishman Who Evidently Has His Heart Set on Winning the War.

"Yes, I know all about it! You are going to tell me that you've been doing it ever since the war started," remarked an Englishman to a London newspaper writer.

"You're going to draw my attention to the price of bread and boot leather, and the fact that you are reduced to taking the kiddies to a cheaper part of the cinema these 'do without' days.

"And you utter the immortal' complaint that you are blessed if you know where all the money goes, since you have nothing to show for it.

"I sympathize with you there. I used to have that feeling.

"I ration my salary now. I spend it only on necessities. Each of my children has a War Savings certificate book, for, I figure out, they are not too young to learn the secret of limiting their wants.

"It's not an easy lesson to learn, I grant you.

"But I tell them: 'Better a War Savings certificate now than a broken and useless toy next week. Better a War Savings certificate and its interest five years hence than a good time today.'

"And that's the spirit of my family at the present time. We are going without and yet not going without.

"The only things we have given up are frivolities and superfluities.

"My wife and I no longer wonder where all the money goes."

Birds Get No Fun Out of Singing.

"That the singing of birds bears no analogy to the singing of human beings, and is neither to please themselves nor to please others, is obvious from at least two facts: One is that birds with defective or only half articulate voices will sing just as joyously and persistently as do birds whose instruments are perfect," John Burroughs writes in Harper's. "I have witnessed this in the case of the hermit thrush, the bobolink and the cockerel of the barnyard. The birds of the wood and of the meadow quite ignored their split whistles, and the cockerel arched his neck and inflated his lungs and went through with the motions of crowing just as proudly and repeatedly as did the cock he was challenging."

THE WIFE

BY JANE PHELPS

Ruth is Disgusted With Claude Beckly and His Familiarity.

CHAPTER LXII.

As a rule Ruth played a very good game of bridge. But she was so disgusted with Claude Beckly, so annoyed by his calling her 'Ruth,' that she could not put her mind upon what she was doing, and made many blunders. Consequently, Mollie and Brian won very easily.

"What ailed you? I never saw you play such a rotten game," Brian said as he gathered up the cards after their guests had left.

"The very idea of that Beckly calling me 'Ruth'!" I nearly died!"

"Would you have felt the same had your boss, that Mandel, called you 'Ruth'?"

"He wouldn't do such a thing. What has that got to do with it, anway?"

"Oh, nothing, only I was wondering."

"Do you mean, Brian Hackett, that you think it all right for Mr. Beckly to call me 'Ruth' when I have met him scarcely half a dozen times; and when he spends his breath telling me how nice I am because I let you and Miss King do as you like and don't make a scene? He's common, vulgar! I don't see how you can stand for such people."

"No—Beckly is neither common nor vulgar —really. Part of it is a pose, and some of it habit. No—you don't understand his sort, Ruth. But he isn't a bad fellow."

"He may not be a bad fellow, but I shall not have him here again. His familiarity is disgusting to me. I never want to see him again. Did you hear him hint to be asked again?"

"Yes. He's pretty hard up, and a good dinner isn't to be despised when one is in that condition. It WAS a good dinner, Ruth. And they both enjoyed it."

"I'm glad if you were pleased."

Ruth did not quite realize it, but had she acted pleased to have Claude Beckly call her 'Ruth,' Brian would have resented it and have been jealous. But the fact that she did resent it — that she showed her dislike for Beckly so plainly, made Brian feel that he could safely have Beckly around when he was with Mollie. He had been most circumspect all the evening. Mollie had taken her cue from him, and not a word or look had passed between them that could possibly have been construed to mean intimacy.

"Of course no one would believe that I cared anything for Mollie — that is, in anyways I ought not," Brian had thought, "but Ruth might imagine things because I have taken Mollie out several times, so I will be careful."

Ruth, knowing nothing of what was passing in Brian's mind, was convinced that she had been uselessly jealous.

"Brian was lonely," she thought. "He only took her out for company, not because he cared particularly for her," and she hugged this idea because it eased her mind.

When Ruth looked at her one letter, the next morning, at breakfast, she gave a little squeal of delight.

"Oh, Brian! Rachel is coming! She leaves day after to-morrow. I am so glad." Tears of joy came into her eyes.

"Have you told Crawford?"

"Oh, yes, she understands. She has known ever since she has been with us that as soon as Rachel could come, she was to go. She is going with Mrs. Curtis."

"Um — hope she won't blab all she knows about us."

"Why, there's nothing to tell, Brian. We dont' quarrel, nor gossip about people. What else is there she could say that you would care about?"

"Oh, she might talk about how hard up we were when she first came to us — before you got your job." The sarcastic tone creeping into his voice as it always did when he spoke of Ruth's work.

"Nonsense! You can't understand what having Rachel means to me, Brian. She has been with me ever since I was a tiny girl, had entire care of me. It is like having a mother come to me."

"Perhaps she will be, discontented. She'll find a New York flat very different from Mrs. Clayborne's plantation, and being the only servant also some change from a house where there are so many."

Brian could not have explained the feeling he had about Rachel. Yet he wished she were not coming. Her eyes were very sharp. She idolized Ruth, as he knew. He would feel she was watching him, making sure he was doing all he could to make Ruth happy. Not that he wasn't, but he didn't like the idea of criticism, especially from a servant.

"Oh, she'll be happy with me!" Ruth replied. Nothing could make her sad now that Rachel was surely coming.

"I hope so! It would be too bad to lose Crawford and then have Rachel want to go back."

A NECESSITY IN THE HOUSE.

Most of the common ills of life arise from a torpid, sluggish condition of the Liver, Kianeys or Bowels, and because they act on each of these organs in a direct and specific way Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills overcome serious and painful diseases over which ordinary medicines have no control.

WOULD ABOLISH MONEY.

Japanese Prescription for Bringing In a Paradise of Peace.

We will make here a suggestion which furnishes us a method to prevent the appearance of the rich, and avert the consequent result of the difference between rich and poor. The suggestion consists of the entire disuse of the money over the world, in order to give the struggle for existence a check, to make way with the difference of rich and poor, and thus to promote peace and equality in the public life of mankind.

It is through the medium of the money that wealth is accumulated, and the accumulation entails the difference of rich and poor, with its resultant struggle for existence.

This state of things is most undesirable. The end of mankind is not to be proud of individual talent or ability, but to co-enjoy the peace in the world, just as in a family, and any cause which brings about any inequality in public life must be radically eliminated. It is for this reason that we dare to suggest the disuse of the money to prevent the difference of rich and poor.

What crafty fellow ever introduced the money for us in human life? Of course, nationalization of various valuables, such as gold, silver, jewels, etc., shall be implied in the disuse of the money and their ownership by individuals be prohibited. Such valuables retain their values only when they are used as a means of [illegible] but will be nothing more than those pebbles on the road when equality is to be prevalent. They may have some value in giving us a good feeling on account of their elegance, then they may be used, under public ownership, for the decoration of shrines, temples, churches, halls and many other like buildings to the common pleasure of the public at large.

Most complicated troubles may arise from the adjustment of properties after the enforcement of the disuse of the money. With the proposed suggestion mines, railroads, ships, electric and gas plants, waterworks, and many other properties essential to the common interest of a nation shall be transferred to the national ownership, not to say of the nationalization of land, and they shall be equally compensated for, as for the confiscation of money and several bonds, with a kind of registration bond newly issued for the purpose, which should have the characteristic of temporary transitional means until an improved feature makes its appearance in a new society.

In other regards individuals may be permitted to retain their own property, personal and real, and maintain their professions or occupations. Transactions shall be carried on by the exchange of kind in kind, or barter. But as barter is too inconvenient to be enforced, a ticket system may be taken for the remedy of this defect. As has been stated, our ideal disuse of the money does not admit any accumulation of wealth, and so the tickets shall be given each a certain period of time, say ten, twenty, thirty years or more, during which they can be in use, and after which their circulation ceases.

When this is accomplished, there can be no more complaints, no more dissatisfactions, no more contradictions, and no more misunderstandings, and the world will be reorganized into a paradise of peace.—Seijiro Bawashima in Dai Nippon.

QUIT MEAT WHEN KIDNEYS BOTHER

TAKE A GLASS OF SALTS BEFORE BREAKFAST IF YOUR BACK HURTS OR BLADDER IS TROUBLING YOU.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well known authority. Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys, they become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood, then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver troubles, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, stop eating meat, and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

Man-Woman's Secret.

An old man of 73, known as Ferdinand Hansen, recently had a seizure in the main streets of Leeds, England. When he was taken to the infirmary a secret that had been kept for 30 years was revealed. The old man was really a woman.

Though similar cases will be recalled, the length of this masquerade is remarkable. Hansen was reputed to be a Dane, and had lodged for seven years with a Mrs. Green, who never suspected the secret. The lodger told of a wealthy sister living in Hamburg, and Mrs. Green was led to believe she would benefit through Hansen. The supposed man worked in Leeds and Dewsbury as a chemist's assistant.

"He was a heavy pipe-smoker," said Mrs. Green, "and always behaved like a gentleman. He spoke several languages, and told me he was a widower, having married in the United States."

NOBLE OLD WOMAN WAS MURDERED

Mme. Breshkovskaya Shot by Bolsheviki.

FOUGHT FOR OPPRESSED

This Splendid Champion of Human Liberty Was Known as "The Little Grandmother of the Revolution" and She Suffered for Many Years to Secure Liberty for Her Fellow-countrymen.

ACCORDING to a despatch from Petrograd, Madame Breshkovskaya, known as "the Little Grandmother of the Revolution," has met death at the hands of the Bolsheviki. In this tragic manner fate not infrequently rewards those who have devoted their lives to the service of others.

Born of a noble Russian family, the owners of hundreds of serfs, Mme. Breshkovskaya was but eighteen years of age when she left her home and began her life-long labors against the iniquity of Tsardom and in behalf of human liberty. Between that time and her final release, in March, 1917, she had spent forty-four years in prison or exile, part of the time in a Siberian village north of the Arctic Circle and for many years a captive in the Fortress of SS. Peter and Paul.

The revolution released her from a sentence of perpetual exile, and her journey westward was a triumphal progress that culminated in Petrograd, where enormous crowds, to whom the tale of her long martyrdom was well known, gave her a frantic welcome. Despite the weight of seventy-three years, she did not relax her efforts to obtain real and lasting freedom for her torn and unhappy country. Again and again, with indomitable courage, she lifted her voice in warning against the disloyal element that sought to sign a disgraceful peace with the nation's enemies. So severe was her denunciation of the Bolsheviki that her friends were obliged to hide her from the wrath of that band of anarchists and freebooters.

MME. BRESHKOVSKAYA.

The perpetrators of this crime against humanity have many secret and open sympathizers in this country and the greater number of them are of the educated classes. It is not probable that the brutal murder of this heroic old woman will destroy any of their admiration for her slayers. Theirs is a peculiar phase of "parlor anarchy," which shows itself in its most virulent form in the women who throng the court-room when traitors are on trial. In more than one of our institutions of education and "uplift" there are nests for the hatching of dangerous and disloyal activities that will bear watching.

THE MAKING OF ITALY.

Genius of Cavour Created Strong New Nation.

The story of the making of modern Italy is one of the great romances of history. In 1850 the country was divided into two kingdoms — that of Sardinia, ruled over by Victor Emmanuel of the House of Savoy, and that of the Two Sicilies, ruled over by Ferdinand of the House of Bourbon. There were also three duchies and the Papal States, while Lombardy and Venice belonged to Austria. Under the advice of Cavour, Victor Emmanuel sent a small army to aid the French and the English in the Crimean War and thus secured the right to sit in the peace conference. At that conference he protested against Austrian misrule in the Italian provinces of Lombardy and Venice and laid the foundation for the ultimate recovery of this territory.

Then followed the war between France and Austria, which was preceded by a secret agreement that the Italian provinces should be given to Italy after they had been won by France. After the battle of Solferino, when the Austrians were defeated, Lombardy was ceded to the Kingdom of Sardinia, but Venice remained Austrian. This was in 1859. As soon as it was evident that the Austrian power was weakened revolution broke out in the duchies of Modena, Parma and Tuscany and in the papal State of Romagna, their dukes and papal legates were sent flying and annexation to Sardinia was asked. It was accomplished in 1860. Thus all northern Italy, with the exception of Venice and the Papal States, was brought under the rule of Victor Emmanuel.

In the same year the kingdom of the Two Sicilies was captured by Garibaldi, with the secret countenance of Cavour and his king, and it, too, was annexed to the growing Italian kingdom. There remained only Venice and the Papal States, with the city of Rome, to be brought into the union to complete the work which Cavour had undertaken. But Napoleon, who was acting as a sort of patron of Italy and also as a protector of the Pope, was not willing to displease the church party by consenting to the destruction of the Pope's temporal power.

Venice came to Italy as a result of the war between Prussia and Austria in 1866, when Prussia needed an ally and secured the help of Victor Emmanuel.

The King attempted to come to an amicable understanding with the Pope for the entrance of the Papal States into the re-established kingdom of Italy, but failed.

Matters came to a climax in 1870 when the Franco-Prussian war broke out. Napoleon withdrew from Italy the French troops which had been kept in the states of the church for the protection of the Pope. Yet Italy was ready to go to Napoleon's assistance if she were needed. The offer of 100,000 troops was not thought of enough importance to be acknowledged. Victor Emmanuel then decided that his hands were free. After informing France what he was about to do he ordered his own troops to move on Rome. They were commanded by Gen. Cadorna, the father of the Gen. Cadorna who has won fame in the present war as the commander of the Italian troops fighting the Austrians. The attack was ordered at 5.30 o'clock on the morning of Sept. 20, 1870, and continued until 10.30 o'clock. At 10.10 the white flag was displayed by the order of the Pope and a messenger was sent out to Gen. Cadorna. It was quickly agreed that Rome should surrender all but the Leonine City, which should remain under the jurisdiction of the Pope. At the Pope's request, however, the Italian troops soon after took possession of the city on both banks of the Tiber, leaving only the Vatican and its grounds, the Lateran Palace and the villa of Castel Gandolfo to the undisputed possession of the church.

Thus ended the work which Cavour had begun, but which he did not live to see fully completed. When he died in 1861, however, it had progressed so far as to make him content with the prospect of its ultimate consummation.

The new Italy, by a law dated May 13, 1871, guaranteed to the Pape a yearly payment of $645,000 in compensation for the loss of revenues from the territories which it had seized, but this sum has never been claimed, and with the arrears and interest there is now due about $30,000,000. But Italy is united under one king and the church accepts the situation with philosophy.

British Hold Spitzbergen.

The British flag has been hoisted at Ebeltort harbor in Spitzbergen. The German wireless station and German properties there have been destroyed.

The outbreak of war in 1914 put an end to the leisurely deliberations of the international conference which was sitting at Christiania to decide upon the future control of the Arctic archipelago of Spitzbergen. Thereafter the matter was dropped, until last March, when a clause in the Russo-German peace treaty of Brest-Litovsk, apparently deciding to divide up the islands between the two contracting parties, aroused a great deal of attention. There was considerable correspondence in the London Times urging that Germany's claims should not go unchallenged. Correspondence between the Royal Geographical Society and Mr. Balfour was also published in the Times (March 13), in which the society pressed the Government to annex the islands. Mr. Balfour replied that as the question could not be decided without reference to several foreign Governments, a definite settlement could not then be arrived at.

Spitzbergen is immensely rich in coal and iron. The iron deposits are said to be unsurpassed in Europe, while the islands are supposed to contain as much coal as Belgium. That British interests in Spitzbergen have not remained undeveloped during the war is shown by the fact that the output of the Northern Exploration Company for the current year is over 80,000 tons, and next year the output is expected to reach over 100,000 tons.

John Bull.

Everybody in the war gets more bouquets than John Bull, yet but for John there wouldn't be any war. It would have been over long ago and Germany would be busy with the details of her appropriation of Europe.

John Bull has saved civilization. We call it that, though civilization is a tough product and would have survived Kultur, just as it survived Attila and the successors of Mahomet and all the conquering hordes that swept over Europe. Belgium saved civilization when her body blocked the road to France as in history a woman's arm, that for a moment barred a door, saved a fugitive prince. France saved civilization by her sacrifices, and her military competence, and her heroism. Russia saved it by her drive into East Prussia. Italy has helped in her turn and now Uncle Sam has brought indispensable aid and fresh strength to the great cause.

But Uncle Sam could comeandbring his help because from the first day of the war Britannia has ruled the wave and made the seas passable for all the Allies.

And consider the troops John Bull has raised and trained and sent, and the treasure he has poured out, and the war material he has poured in, and the ships he has built against U-boat destruction! What a tale of fortitude, of devotion of all the immense resources of a great Empire to a great cause!

Our kin, the British, doubtless have among them great faults, and in their day have done wrong deeds, and have been selfish on occasion and often greedy. But in those particulars they are not unlike other peoples, and in this war they have given evidence of being exceedingly handy to have on earth in times of crisis. All the Allies will admit that much about them.

And they will continue on the earth—there is no fear to the contrary—and they will continue to be a strong people. But they will come out of the war with strength depleted by immense sacrifices of blood and treasure and trade and all means of temporal resuscitation; justified in character, glorified by achievement, but in need of nursing.

So will France, so will Belgium, so will every nation that has been long in the thick of the fight; but because Great Britain in the past has been so strong and so rich, there may be danger of a less generous disposition toward her than toward the others, and of less solicitude to bind up her wounds and repair her losses. There will be a feeling that she can take care of herself, and so she will. But that should not be the attitude of these States toward her. To us she has been a great bulwark against the most dangerous enemy that has threatened our place in this hemisphere since we started as an independent nation. We owe her friendliness; a kindness born of sacrifice in the same struggle and of identity of general aims for the reconstruction of the world. We shall be her rivals in trade but we should be generous and considerate rivals, careful not to build up prosperity at cost of hers; helpful as to a people that shares with us a great duty of world reconstruction and reorganization. The rivalry between Uncle Sam and John Bull should be a rivalry in good works, and so, please God; it will be.

THE HAPSBURGS.

Rise and Fall of Ancient Austrian Dynasty.

Rudolf of Hapsburg or Hawk's Crag, a castle on the river Aar, was a hard-battering, steel-clad knight in the thirteenth century. After campaigning against the heathen with great success he turned his attention to Ottocar, King of Bohemia, a Middle Ages Czecho-Slovak of some distinction, and as a result of the argument Ottocar was slain. Rupert became Emperor of the Germans in 1273 and ruled with a strong hand, destroying castle and keeps owned by robber barons and conducting himself with valor and determination. He died in 1291, the first of the Hapsburg Emperors, Kings and Princes, now after more than 600 years, are beginning to find life desperately uncomfortable.

Rudolph was unable to keep the Holy Roman crown in the family, for seven kaisers ruled before another Hapsburg arrived, in the person of Albert of Austria. His wife brought to him as a dowry the rulership of Bohemia and Hungary and he was elected Emperor in the same year, 1438, as Albert II. From that time onward a Hapsburg always was domfuant in Vienna. Another branch of the family held the throne of Spain, and the Netherlands.

Something of Rupert's dominating personality was found in many of his descendants, and brought a succession of misfortunes. It is worth remembering that Charles V. and his son Philip II. faced that long civil war which finally brought freedom to the Low Countries, despite the cruelties of Alva. There are some who say that "the Hapsburg Lip" was a physical dowry from Margaret of the Tyrol, who brought that province to Austria in 1342 by her marriage. She is known in history as "Pouch-mouth." Certain it is that a mouth of no great beauty has been common in the sons of the family.

To trace the story of Austria-Hungary and the Hapsburgs through six centuries would be neither pleasant nor profitable. It is a welter of bloodshed and oppression. Self-willed and weak as most of the monarchs were they seemed fated to be determined and hard at the wrong times. Yet they had personal qualities, none the less, that bound the nobles to their throne. One of the most attractive and heroic figures in the annals of the family was a woman, Maria Theresa, who was despoiled by the first of the ravening Hohenzollerns, Frederick II., called by a misunderstanding world "the Great." In two wars Frederick conquered and held Silesia, to-day the home of countless Prussian landed proprietors who are better known as Junkers.

The Holy Roman empire which was practically a Hapsburg property is gone. The Netherlands are gone. Italy is gone. Silesia is gone. Bohemia and Moravia are gone. Hungary is gone. The Jugo-Slav territory is gone, and last of all, Karl of Hapsburg is gone, the victim of [illegible]

Poets Killed in Great War

MOST of us when we think of the poets whose names are destined to be imperishably associated with this war recall Rupert Brooke, Allen Seeger, and John McCrae, but we are reminded by Lieut. Robert Nichols, of the Royal Field Artillery, that there is a host of others. It may be that none of them has written a poem that will ever find the wide popularity of "Flanders' Fields" by the Canadian soldier-poet. Indeed, the pathetic fact is that most of these young singers, especially the Oxford group, of which Lieut. Nichols was a member, passed out of the world before any of their harvest of song was gathered, and only by the buddings of peace-time will we be able to judge what the world lost when Grenfell, Graves, Mackintosh and Sorley gave their lives for the British Empire. Some of these names will be unfamiliar to most people, although Grenfell had an established reputation. Of his "Into Battle" Rudyard Kipling said, "This man's lips were touched when he wrote that."

This little group of Oxford poets looked to Masefield and Davidson as their leaders who had begun the work of purging the poetry of the '90's of its sentimentality. They were in revolt against the tradition that a poet should be long-haired and effeminate and devoted to the consumption of absinthe. One of the most interesting things about them, as revealed by Lieut. Nichols, is that they were all — he modestly excludes himself — athletes. Brooke belonged to the school, and of Brooke someone said that he was the most magnificent-looking man in England. Their bodies were as hard, as vigorous, as clean and as well trained as their minds. Robert Graves, who is still alive, with wounds on his body and ribbons on his breast, was a fine boxer, and his exploit of knocking out three men in one afternoon seems to Lieut Nichols to deserve considerable attention as a feat of poetry.

Seigfried Sassoon, like Graves, is alive, bearing wounds and honors. He was a master of foxhounds. Grenfell was a polo player and boxer, his father was the famous sporting peer, Lord Desborough. W. N. Hodgson was a noted runner. He was killed at the Somme the morning after writing a wonderful poem in which he showed that, like Brooke and Seeger, he had a premonition of death. So, too, is Charles Sorley dead, and when Masefield heard the news he said that England had suffered her greatest loss in twenty years. He was only twenty years old when he fell before the German lines with a bullet in his heart. Says Lieut. Nichols: "He was a Viking of a man, more than six feet tall, with a face on which was marked the sternness of a great purpose. When the war began he was a schoolboy at Marlborough, and as good an athlete as he was a poet." Sorley died in a forlorn-hope, trying to take the Hulluch redoubt on the last day of the Loos battle, in the certain knowledge that he and his companions would be wiped out before they reached the German lines.

Alan Macintosh was another of whom great things were expected had he lived. He was a Scotsman with a humor that was the delight of his friends, and that endeared him to his men. He used to write songs for them, and they sang them on the march. He was wounded early in the war, returned to England half blind and with a bad arm, and then went to Oxford to train officers. He became engaged, and it was thought that he was through with the war, but the call was too great, and he returned to the front and was killed a few months ago. Lieut. Nichols himself was, like the others, one of the earliest to enlist in "Kitchener's Mob." He was shell-shocked and rendered unfit for further service, although he often said that "he believed that a man with two legs had no business anywhere except in the front lines."

Lieut. Nichols dissents from the idea generally held that the poets of whom he speaks were made poets by the war. They were all poets before the war began; the war merely directed their thoughts into new channels, and the diversion was not so abrupt, for after all these were men, their thoughts were manly thoughts, and glorious manhood was their theme. They were not like the poet in May Sinclair's "Tree of Heaven," who for a long time considered that he was too valuable a member of society to risk his life, and that poetry after all ought to deal only with beautiful things. Lieut. Nichols said that the generation at Oxford in the spring of 1914 was, according to Raper, a famous old tutor, and Raleigh, senior professor of English, the most brilliant in twenty years. He mentions the fact that there were with him in Trinity, before the war, seventy men, and of them thirty-four have been killed, and he says that what is true of his college is true of all the colleges of England. The very flower of the land, of the race, is gone, and thinking of them one may question the statement made so readily and so often that after the war the world will be a better place to live in.

Some English!

A soldier who has spent many months on service in Egypt says that one of the strangest things he remembers was a placard in a cafe chantant in an Egyptian town. It read: "Every of the consummations of the coldness, 1 piastre besides. Every of the claim to be address directly to the direction.' During of the repetitions the price of consummations to be the same that in every the other's coffee." The translation is: "All iced drinks, 1 piastre extra All complaints to be made at the office. Notwithstanding the performance the prices will be the same as those of other cafes."

THE GOSPEL OF HATE.

How Bolsheviki Carry Out Their Policy of Murder.

How the Bolshevist propagandists of the "Red Terror" proceeded with the work of preparing the minds of the Russian workmen and peasants for the task of wiping out the majority of the members of the capitalist and middle classes is described in detail in recent issues of the Berliner Tageblatt by Hans Vorst, the generally well-posted Moscow correspondent of that leading Liberal German newspaper. The stories sent out by the German writer seem to show that the Bolshevist Extraordinary Committee for Fighting the Counter-Revolution stops at nothing in its desperate efforts to maintain the Bolsheviki in power.

Carl Radek, named shortly after the October revolution of last year as chief Bolshevist agent for carrying on propaganda work at home and abroad, especially among the German and Austrian soldiers, is, according to Herr Vorst, one of the principal advocates of terrorism. Writing in the Isvestia, an official Bolshevist organ, of Sept. 6, six days after the attempted assassination of Premier Nikolai Lenine by a girl Social Revolutionist, Dadek, under the heading, "The Red Terror," came out strongly for public executions, openly declaring that also members of bourgeoisie who "take no immediate part in the White Guard movement" were being executed and ought to be executed. Vorst sums up the principal idea of the Radek article as follows:

"Thus far the Soviet Government has only confiscated the means of production. Now the program calls for the dispossession of the bourgeoisie of all their personal property as well; money, valuables, furs, good lodgings, warm clothing, in short, everything is to be taken away by force, with the exception of articles of absolute necessity. And this measure is not to be carried out by Government bodies, but by organized divisions of tens of thousands of workers. Where it is a matter of terrorizing one class by another the entire class must take an active part in striking the enemy to earth and in punishing the vanquished. Every single worker must take an active part in the civil war."

Radek closed his appeal by saying: "May the red sword of the mass terror he raised and may it, in the name of the triumph of the popular masses, come down relentlessly upon the heads of the counter-revolutionary bourgeoisie!"

Herr Vorst says that when he showed this article to Karakhan, Acting People's Commissary for Foreign Affairs, the latter asserted that it was merely Radek's private view, and that the Soviet Government had no intention of carrying out such a program, but Vorst points out that Radek is a power in the Bolshevist Government and that his ideas have a strong following in ruling circles. Furthermore, he says that Larin, counted one of the most moderate and well-balanced members of the Soviet Government, told him personally that under certain circumstances the measures proposed by Radek might really be carried out. Larin was the man who, as briefly reported in a London cablegram on Sept. 30, told Herr Vorst that if the Bolsheviki were compelled to leave Moscow they would practically lay it in ashes. The German writer quotes a Bolshevist paper called the Red Evening Gazette as hurling the following threat at the bourgeoisie:

"We are able to wipe you out to the last bourgeois, without even leaving any to perpetuate your race. We don't need you. We can get along without you. And if every workman, soldier, sailor and peasant takes it upon himself to destroy only a single parasite your end is here."

The President-maker.

Thurlow Weed, an old-time political leader of New York, was called "the President-maker." He was prominent in procuring the nomination of Gen. W. H. Harrison in 1840, of Gen. Taylor in 1848 and of Gen. Scott in 1852, though the last named was not elected. In 1860 he supported Lincoln, though he had favored the nomination of William H. Seward, of New York. He never held any public office.

Fruits and Vegetables.

A fruit is the same as a vegetable, considered botanically; popularly a fruit is a vegetable production that may be eaten without cooking; a vegetable is such a production which is cooked before it is eaten.

LOOK AT CHILD'S TONGUE IF SICK, CROSS, FEVERISH

Hurry, Mother! Remove poisons from little stomach, liver, bowels.

Give "California Syrup of Figs" at once if bilious or constipated.

Look at the tongue, mother. If coated, it is a sure sign that your little one's somach, liver and bowels need a gentle, thorough cleansing at once.

When peevish, cross, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, doesn't eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has stomach-ache, sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of the little bowels, without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

You needn't coax sick children to take this harmless "fruit laxative;" they love its delicious taste, and it always makes them feel splendid.

Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. To be sure you get the genuine, ask to see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

VIOLET

One That Bloomed a Little Late In Life.

By CECILY ALLEN.

"Bring on the hot rolls, Violet," said Mrs. Brent in her sharp, decisive tones.

The tall, angular girl thus admonished returned to the kitchen—and then the deluge of merriment!

Young Graham, the superintendent of the beet sugar factory, bit his lip, then choked over an infinitesimal scrap of breakfast food. Professor Hinds of the high school faculty cleared his throat, then, with fork and knife upraised in an attitude much decried in the modern books on etiquette, stared blankly after the retreating figure. Bessie Layton, the stenographer at the Sampson implement offices, she of the fluffy pompadour and retrousse nose, giggled, then hastily swallowed a spoonful of coffee, which promptly went down her "Sunday throat," and this on Thursday morning! And simultaneously a gale of laughter swept around the circle of boarders at Mrs. Brent's select and "homelike" establishment.

To the accompaniment of this laughter Violet passed the hot rolls from boarder to boarder, little dreaming that she was responsible for the untoward merriment, not that laughter and merriment were uncommon at Mrs. Brent's. The cheerful atmosphere of her boarding house as much as her own good cookery kept the same circle of guests there year after year. Only Professor Hinds, the new principal of the high school, and pretty Grace Saunders were newcomers this season. And Violet—yes, Violet was the new waitress. Violet!

As she thrust the delicious rolls under Fred Graham's shaking shoulders he remembered, coughed and exclaimed:

"That was the best story you ever told, Mrs. Brent."

Grace Saunders shot him a grateful glance, but Professor Hinds looked up blankly, as if trying to remember the story that had never been told. Then, as Violet again disappeared through the kitchen door, he murmured:

"Most incongruous. Never saw anything further removed from a shrinking, delicate violet in my life—six feet, if she's an inch. Funny how parents do select such inappropriate names for their children! Violet! Ought to have called her Sunflower!"

"But, professor, you must bear in mind that the name was bestowed when the girl measured perhaps twelve inches. Babies measure about a foot, don't they?" and young Graham gazed inquiringly at his fellow boarders. "Probably was one of those dainty, fragile sort of babies that shoot up like bean poles later on. Did that myself, my mother tells me."

Half an hour later Grace Saunders returned to the dining room intending to ask Mrs. Brent some questions regarding the best stores in the town. She found Violet darting about the table, clearing away crumbs, setting back chairs, etc., with a worried look on her face. Mrs. Brent came in from the kitchen.

"There, Violet, don't you try to straighten up the whole place. You'll be late to school. It's five blocks to the business college, you know, and you've got your dress to change yet."

"Oh, are you going to the business college?" inquired Grace. The tall, slender girl stopped untying her apron at the cordial note in the boarder's voice. "I am so glad, because I am going there too. Today is my first, and it will be so nice to see a familiar face."

Then as suddenly as it had awakened the expression of delighted anticipation died in Violet's face. She remembered. She was the waitress at Mrs. Brent's, waitress for her board and room, and Miss Grace Saunders was the daughter of a millionaire ranch owner and cattle raiser in the southern part of the state. Mrs. Brent and the rest of the "help" in the kitchen had said it was most remarkable that a girl with such a father should not be studying in an eastern college instead of an unknown business college in an obscure western city.

But Grace Saunders was not the sort of girl to be snubbed. When school closed that afternoon Violet Andrews found that Grace could keep pace with her and would not accept the excuse that there was work awaiting the pupil waitress in the Brent home.

"Come into my room tonight, and we will go over those dreadful curlycues together," Grace urged as she turned into the front door at the Brent house, while Violet wheeled to the walk leading to the kitchen. Something told her that a shadow had come into that girl's life since morning, that here was a chance where she herself might be helpful, and Grace Saunders belonged in the class of girls who simply must be of cheer and service to their fellow creatures.

The curlycues were not gone over, however, for within two minutes after Violet had entered Miss Saunders' room they were talking of more personal matters.

"I know now why the men all laughed at the table this morning. It was me. They laughed at the business college too. What is wrong with me?"

Grace glanced up at the angular yet passionate, quivering figure. A high pompadour crowned a long, narrow face, and enormous black bows stood out on either side of her long, thin throat like bat wings. Her frock was absolutely tight fitting, accentuating every angular line.

"Sit down, my dear, and let's talk," said Grace gently.

"It isn't fair," sobbed Violet, flinging herself into the proffered chair. "Here you are with money, beauty and everything. And I've slaved and scrubbed and done washing to earn money enough to pay for my course. But even if I do learn stenography, who will hire me? What do they want with me when they can get girls like you and Miss Layton? There's something wrong with me. What is it?"

Grace laid a friendly hand on the heaving shoulders.

"I think it is your name—and your hair."

Violet sat up very straight.

"My what?"

"Your name and your hair. You see, one always thinks of a violet as something small and shrinking and delicate, and you—well, you are six feet tall with that pompadour. You cannot change your name, but you can change your hair."

The weeks that followed were like fairyland trips to Violet, whose mother had read herself into mental and physical inertia on a diet of novels, while her father had tried to wrest gold from the sphinxlike mountains. She learned that Grace Saunders was merely studying bookkeeping and stenography in order to help her father, whom she adored, and that she had time between studies to do the most wonderful sewing Violet had ever seen. But first she taught Violet how to dress her hair, low and soft in puffs above her ears and a low knot at the nape of her neck; then how to do Delsarte exercises to acquire ease and to feed certain angles with massage cream.

The change was gradual, but one day when Violet waited on the table in a frock made with deep ruffles that broke her height and soft frills at throat and wrist young Graham looked puzzled.

"Seems like violets do bloom sometimes rather late in life," he remarked as he took the entire circle of boarders into his confidence. "But I would like to know how she became shorter."

"Some girls are born with femininity," remarked Grace Saunders gently, "like Miss Layton, for instance." Whereat the little stenographer dimpled delightedly and young Graham beamed approval. "And some girls have to acquire it, like Violet. Just as soon as she dropped exaggerated high heels, lowered her pompadour and wore fluffy frocks instead of straight lines she became feminine and attractive. Such is the psychological influence of frocks. But under it all she had always a most charming nature and a brilliant mind."

"Yes, and she makes such good fudge. I never tasted better in my college days."

It was Professor Hinds who spoke, and in the sudden silence every one stared at him. Who would have thought the man behind the glasses cared for fudge? And then somehow it dawned upon the circle of boarders that the professor was looking very young and bad—yes—he had some wild violets, the first of the warm early spring, in his buttonhole. He took off his glasses and glanced around with amusement.

"Why not? I always was partial to violets."

Mrs. Brent slipped her hand under the tablecloth and found Grace Saunders' palpitating finger tips.

"You knew all the time," she whispered.

"Rather! It was my idea, but the professor took to it with amazing alacrity."

And then pretty Miss Layton sprang from her chair and pushed the astonished young waitress, who had just entered the place, beside the professor.

"The idea of announcing an engagement with the bride to be out of the room! I insist upon passing the hot cakes this morning."

And then, with the memory of that first day and the wave of amusement that had gradually changed to respect and admiration for the girl and her pluck and her adaptability, the boarders of Mrs. Brent's select and homelike establishment rose and solemnly drank a toast in the coffee for which Mrs. Brent was famous.

"To Violet!" cried young Graham.

And this time no one laughed, but the tenderness which comes when love's wings flutter close seemed to soften every eye that looked upon the happy professor and the happier girl.

THE METAL MARKET

Cancellation has been written upon nearly every munition contract in Canada. The 12-inch American shell went by the boards this week before the actual business of production had been commenced. Large machine tools were in turn cancelled by the firm holding the contract from the American Government. In several of these cancellations—in fact in most of them—it will be necessary to do some considerable readjusting. Only one shell contract stands in Canada now, and that is the 240-mm. shell, an American model, the contract being placed in Brantford. If Washington decides to let this contract stand this shop will be employed for some months to come as the order was for a large number of these tapered projectiles.

PRICES EASIER

Prices of steel show an inclination to come down a little more in a few lines. The element of competition is coming more and more into every business deal that offers. Firms that have been looking askance at the smaller orders are now out after them, big or little. It all means a tendency to put the pruning hook into the price list, and this has been done, sheets and bars showing a few more cents off this week.

There is something peculiar in the way certain lines of industry have recovered their producing powers. For instance, the Canadian trade has been told that it was impossible to secure skelp to make tubes, and that there would be no help for it until after the war was over. Canadian warehouses find that immediately on the cessation of hostilities great quantities of tubes are being rushed along to them at war time prices. The belief is that the mills were holding a strategic reserve all the time. The placing of these tubes in Canadian warehouses at high prices means that there will be a scampering now to dispose of them before a further decline in prices and selling profits will be forgotten, the idea being to get from under with the high priced material.

SCRAP METAL

Scrap metal business is poor. It was poor last week and it looks as though it would be poor for some time to come. Dealers are not offering on any available material, and users are not in the market for any considerable tonnage. The feeling seems to grow that there will be a readjustment of the iron and steel situation and needs replacing. The water pipe before there is much of an improvement in the scrap metal trade.—Canadian Machinery and Manufacturing News.

Risks Taken by Ocean Liners.

Even if the Huns have escaped, the life of a merchant ship man in these days is far removed from beer and skittles. An example of what they have to go through is furnished by the narrow squeak the Empress of Britain and the Cardiganshire had one night in the Ægean Sea. Both are big ships, and they were loaded with troops and going at full speed—zigzagging—not a light showing. It was one of those nights when you can hardly see your hand before you. There were no stars, no phosphorous—nothing—nothing but to trust to luck and the ears of the man on the bridge.

The captain of one of the ships has told me that, before he knew it, there was a ship, bow on to him, dead ahead. Of course, the first impulse was to shift his helm; but if he did so, the danger would be of one ship giving the other a glancing blow. Fortunately, the other skipper appreciated this, also. Their nerve, in spite of several years of war-zone work, was still equal to the occasion. It all happened in the twinkling of an eye, and they passed safely, though there had been less than fifty feet separating the ships, and their out-swung lifeboats nearly scraped. The captain of the Cardiganshire, though he could not see him, heard the captain of the Empress of Britain, above the noises of the sea—heard him yell, "For God's sake, old man, don't shift your helm!" so close were they on their respective bridges high above the sea.

Instances of this kind, which try men's souls, nightly occur, and quite frequently there are collisions and tragedies in the pitch dark. The only way that the two ships identified themselves was ten days later, at Saloniki, when the captain of the Cardiganshire heard the skipper of the Empress of Britain asking a friend if he knew what ship he nearly bumped on a certain night. I am sorry to report that the captain of the Empress of Britain lost his life in the Halifax explosion, while doing hospital work.

The Great Lakes.

The boundary line between the United States and Canada runs through the centre of each of the four border lakes that lie along or between the two countries, and jurisdiction over the lakes is shared. There is a permanent international waterways commission, consisting of three Americans and three Canadians, that has control of the use of the waters of the lakes for power and other purposes.

First Fire Alarm in United States.

The first practical trial of a fire alarm telegraph system was made in 1851 in New York, but the plan was much modified in succeeding years and as thus changed was fully adopted in some of the cities of the Eastern states before put in regular use in New York in 1871. In 1902 alone 24 patents relating to fire alarms were issued in the United States. Among the patents hitherto issued have been combination electric fire alarms and extinguishers, combined fire and burglar alarms, combined fire alarm and time detectors, combined fire and police alarms, combined fire and telephone-fire alarm system, etc. The patents include fire alarm devices of several classes and comprise a wide variety in style, form and method of operation.

SEATTLE OFFICER TELLS OF TROUBLE

Collins Was Nearly Down and Out —Gains 25 Pounds by Taking Tanlac.

"A medicine that will do as much for the suffering people as this Tanlac has done for me is certainly worth recommending to the public and I can't say too much for it," said John W. Collins, of 1214 West Columbia Street, Seattle, while in a Bartwell drug store recently. Mr. Collins has been a resident of Seattle for the past thirteen years and is a popular member of the police force.

"When I began taking Tanlac," Mr. Collins continued, "I weighed only one hundred and fifty pounds and was in such a bad condition that I could not patrol my beat. But I now weigh one hundred and seventy-five pounds and am feeling fine. I have had trouble with my stomach for several years. Nearly everything I would eat disagreed with me. My food would almost invariably sour and keep me filled with gas and misery most of the time. Then sometime ago I had a fall of about thirty feet which came near putting me out of commission. On top of this I had an attack of grippe and I simply got to where I was just about down and out. My whole body seemed full of neuralgia and rheumatism and I ached all over. Every joint in me ached and the pain in the left side of my back, over my kidneys were so severe at times that I could hardly stand it. Nothing did me any good and finally I just had to give up my position, stop working entirely and do nothing but try and find relief. My sleep was very poor and I kept falling off in weight until I got down to one hundred and fifty pounds.

"Then I got uneasy about my condition, went to Colorado and stayed there for a while, but never did get any better until I began taking Tanlac, and then I commenced climbing right up. I have used six bottles now and have gotten rid of all that neuralgia and rheumatism entirely and never feel an ache or pain. Appetite is great and my stomach is in such a shape that I can eat just anything I want without the least trouble afterwards. I now sleep like a log every night and am in splendid condition in every way. I'm going back to work to-morrow, and I cheerfully recommend Tanlac to everybody."

Tanlac is sold in Peterboro by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd. in Havelock by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd.; in Fowler's Corners by W. A. Hunter; in Gelert by A. J. Scott; in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

Real Money.

Forgetting how to figure in "regular money" and learning how to calculate in "this doggone stuff" is one of the first worries of the Canadian soldiers in France. "Regular money" is good dollars and cents, nickels, dimes and quarters. "This doggone stuff" is the name applied to French francs, usually paper money, often as low as single francs, or twenty cents, for most small cities have issued local small change currency. The soldiers do not like French paper money. They say it is trash, and tears, and is hard to count. On the other hand, the French are shocked when a soldier crumples French paper up and shoves it in his pocket the "way they do back home." French money is to be handled in big pocketbooks and not crumpled. "Look at some real money once," a Tommy told a merchant, and flashed a bright new silver certificate. When he crumpled it up in his fist to show how "real money can be used" the Frenchman almost fainted.

Jimmie Got a Raise.

A merchant, while engaged in the office the other morning, discovered that he had left his pocketknife at home and as he needed one urgently he asked the different clerks, but none of them happened to have one. Finally the errand boy walked in and the merchant called him, asking if he was able to produce the desired article. Jimmy handed over his knife. "How is it, Jimmy, that you alone out of my entire staff seem to have a pocket-knife with you?" smiled the proprietor, eyeing Jimmy with undisguised admiration. "Dunno, sir," replied the youth, "unless it's because my wages are so low that I can't afford more'n one pair of trousers."

The Partizanski Flag.

There is a flavor of sheer romance about that Partizanski flag with its Scottish thistle, English rose, and Russian bear embroidered by the English ladies of Kermanshah, which figures in a striking little despatch from a correspondent. Partizanski is a Cossack under the command of Bicharak, "the man with the face of an iron dreamer" met, with his troop, by the way, at Kasri Shirin. There was a Col. Leslie among the Cossack troop who spoke no word of English and only a word or two of French, having been an "exile," as he put it, "for over three hundred years," an ancestor of his having come to Russia in the reign of Ivan. He had read of pipes, in his family records, but it was at Hendali, on the inhospitable borders of Luristan, that he heard the music of them for the first time, and it was a Punjabi piper who played the Cossacks in. Fortunately, there was somebody who could put pen to paper witnessing that march of the Cossacks into Mendali, for it is wholly worthy of Kipling: "The Partizanski rode in singing their Russian part-songs, a deep-toned chant, the sergeant-major of each sotnia conducting with his whip. They were greeted with the 'Hurrahs' of the British soldiers and the Mohemmedan sepoys, and the war cries of the Jats and Sikhs. When the Sikhs broke in with their 'Wah Guru ji ka khalso,' 'Wah Guru ji fi fetteh,' the Cossacks broke off their songs and cheered. As the infantry filed into camp, their long bayonets fixed in Russian fashion, the piper of the Punjabi battalion, a pupil of the drum major of the Black Watch, strode backward and forward, playing each company in to the tune of 'The Campbells Are Coming' and 'Scotland the Brave.'" And the Russian Col. Leslie, the exile of three hundred years, "hearing his native pipes for the first time, nearly wept."

The Blockade.

The blockade of German ports, except those on the Baltic, began with the war. But the attempt to go as far as possible toward starving Germany did not come until after Germany had announced her intention of trying to starve Great Britain by unrestricted submarine warfare. The British blockade, a natural result of the state of war between the two countries, was loosely drawn at first. But on Jan. 25, 1917, Germany commandeered foodstuffs. The German Government also announced unrestricted submarine warfare, to be effective beginning Feb. 18, 1915. As the avowed purpose of the German Government was to starve Great Britain by this new style of blockade, and as it was no longer possible to distinguish between food shipments intended for the German army and foodstuffs intended for civil population of Germany, nor between other goods which might go to supply the German army and those which might go to supply civilians, Great Britain announced on March 1, 1915, that it would confiscate all goods of "presumed enemy destination, ownership or origin." This was in effect notice that a lawful blockade existed and would be enforced.

Had Hacking Cough

Couldn't Sleep Nights.

Hacking coughs are very wearing on the system. The constant coughing disturbs the rest, and keeps the lungs and bronchial tubes in an irritated and inflamed condition.

Don't neglect the hacking cough. You can get rid of it with a few doses of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup; the most prompt, pleasant and perfect cough remedy known.

Miss Catherine M. McLean, Craik, Sask., writes:—"Last winter I caught a heavy cold and was laid up for some time. I had such a hacking cough I couldn't sleep at night. I didn't think I would get over it. One day a friend dropped in to see me and was surprised to see how bad my cough was. She advised me to try Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. The next day I sent for a bottle, and I soon got relief, and by the time I had taken two bottles, my cough was all gone, and now I am able to do my work again. I don't think there is anything to equal it."

There are plenty of "pine" preparations on the market trying to live on the reputation of "Dr. Wood's." The genuine is put up in a yellow wrapper, three pine trees the trade mark, price 25c. and 50c. a bottle. Put up only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto.

BETTER THAN RICHES.

The desire to accumulate something for one's children is a commendable one; but it is well to bear in mind that the best things are to be given to the children personally, in good examples, kind words and thoughtful teachings. A very sensible writer recently said about this important subject: "children must be taught what the parents wish them to know. Teach them truthful, gentle ways and they will be true and gentle. If a boy learns bad language from his father, he will repeat it just as certainly as he has a tongue in his mouth, and if a little girl hears her mother gossip she will gossip just as soon as she meets a playmate. People who devour their food like cattle must not expect their children to have good table manners. Gentlemen and good women are home made. There is nothing on earth for which one ought to be more thankful than for having been brought up in the atmosphere of a pure home. Such a home may be narrow and even hard, it may be deficient in material comforts. A man sturdy as an oak once said, "I was the son of poor parents and from my youth up was inured to self denial and hardships, but I do not remember of ever hearing a word from the lips of either my mother or my father that was not as it should be. Better such recollections than a great inheritance."

A HOME SNUGGERY.

There should always be one spot in the home sacred to the best interests of the family. A room full of comfort, where the sofa is made to lounge on, and the chairs to tilt back, and the carpet to dig the toes in; where bills and bickerings are alike forbidden, and the straight laced propriety of the dining-room or parlour can be abandoned for romps and story telling; where the dust doesn't show, and nothing is too fine to use, and at whose door all the burdens drop off as they will some time at the gate of heaven—a room whose speech is silver and whose silence is golden—where the tranquility of a summer Sabbath is broken only by sweet murmers of love and confidence, where a happy cat curls herself to repose in blissful affinity with the peaceful housedog, a troubling and the weary are at rest. A sort of moral lean-to which adjoins the house beautiful. Here Jacob's ladder is planted, and angels ascending and descending bring with them endless measures of peace.

Every home should have this one place of retreat.

It is no impossible place. Love is the architect; content its atmosphere. We find it in our friends' homes, often where least expected, and are surprised because it is never a show place. It is simply a golden room in a wooden house.

COULD NOT SLEEP.

Miss Gertrude Pratt, Wolseley St., Barrie, Ont., writes: "I was very much run down and could not sleep either day or night, and my arms and legs ached so that life was very miserable. After using six boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, I feel well and strong again."

BUY a War-Savings Stamp at any Money-Order Post Office, Bank, or other place displaying the War-Savings Stamp sign. This will cost $4.00. At the same time ask for a Certificate and affix the W.-S. S. thereto.

Fill in the name and address of your friend, of your boy, girl, or other person for whom your gift is intended, and there you have the most desirable of gifts!

You might say, in presenting it, "It is worth four dollars in cash right now at any post office, but I advise you to hold it because it is the promise of the Dominion of Canada to pay you Five Dollars on the first day of 1924.

"This is a "baby bond", earning interest, and you can make it a bigger "bond" by saving up and buying more stamps. It is easy to buy W.-S. S. because for every 25 cents you save you can get a THRIFT Stamp, 16 of which on a Thrift Card will be exchanged for a W.-S. S."

After January, 1919, the purchase price of W.-S. S. increases 1 cent a month—the interest earned. The cash surrender value increases also. Certificates with one or more stamps can be registered at the Post Office against loss by fire, theft, or other cause.

A gift of a War-Savings Stamp is more than a gift of cash. It may well mean the commencement of habits of Thrift, to the great benefit of both the individual and the country at large.

Ald. William Langford and Ald. Edgar Worth Will Not Enter Municipal Contest

Eight Remaining Aldermen Will Be Candidates for Re-Election Once They Make Up Their Minds.

A BIG YEAR

Ald. Edgar Worth and Ald. William Langford have definitely decided not to offer themselves for re-election to next year's Council. Ald. Worth intends to take a trip to England in the near future and will be unable to give the necessary time to the duties imposed on members of the City Council.

In a valedictory statement to the electors, Ald. Langford does not reveal his reasons for retiring from municipal activities, but expresses appreciation to the electors of the North Ward for the support they gave him during the five or six years that he served on the Council Board. Ald Langford declares that citizens should take more interest in civic affairs, particularly at this time when matters of great importance are coming forward.

"I have tried to help keep the tax rate down," said Ald. Langford, but it seems impossible to accomplish very much in this direction. However, with new expenditures that have to be made and other demands that cannot be avoided, it will require very careful management in regard to finance in order to keep the tax rate within reasonable bounds."

Ald. A. A. McIntyre in announcing his intention of entering the municipal contest, believes that there never was a time in the history of Peterborough when such important matters would have to be dealt with by the City Council. As a senior member in the Council, Ald. McIntyre believes that he can serve the Council in a larger capacity than ever as a result of the experience he has gained through many years' association with municipal work.

Alderman Taylor said that it looks as if he will run and it is his present intention to do so, but he could not be definite.

"It's hard to tell just yet, but I'll most probably run," was Ald. A. Weir's answer. "I have no particular ticket to run on but my past reputation."

Alderman J. Edgar evaded a definite answer, but said the chances are that he will come out for 1919.

Ald. Malcolm McIntyre declined to say whether or not he would be a candidate for re-election.

Other members of the Council had the following to say when asked if they would stand for re-election:

Ald. J. Saunders—"In all probability I will run. I am not quite sure."

Ald. R. N. Jones—"Yes. I will be a candidate for re-election."

Ald. F. H. Dobbin—"I don't know yet. I haven't made up my mind."

"In conclusion, let me urge the citizens in general to give the new Council their encouragement and support. Intelligent and active interest in municipal affairs by all ratepayers will do a great deal toward bringing about the best and wisest solution of all problems affecting the welfare of the city."

IVORY BRANDS

Those who wish to purchase Ivory Toilet Articles for Christmas presents, etc., are greatly bewildered with the variety of brands stamped on each article. For instance an article stamped French Ivory might be manufactured in United States, Canada, or Japan. The original brand stamped Oriental Ivory comes from Great Britain, and each piece is not only uniform in colour but will last probably ten years or even longer.

Paris Welcomes the President

Scene Presented a Dramatic Picture in American History.

By William Philip Simms.
(United Press.)

PARIS, Dec. 14.—"You will see in a minute what the people of Paris think of you, Mr. President," was Premier Clemenceau's radiant greeting to President Wilson, as the latter smilingly stepped down from his train at the Bois Bologne station to-day.

And he did.

Already from packed windows on both sides of the station cheers were succeeding cheers— "Vive Wilson," "Vive L'America."

The procession, down the Champs Elysees, with the guard of honour drawn up on either side and the arch of triumph in the background, presented a new dramatic picture in American history.

The demonstration increased as the cortege moved on. Wilson and Poincare were continually acknowledging the wild outbursts of enthusiasm, while their wives in the second carriage, smiled and smiled.

These demonstrations were started the instant the special train was sighted. They were redoubled when President Poincare clasped Wilson's hand in both of his and said in English:

"Mr. President, I am very glad to meet you."

But when the Presidential party appeared on the street, and came into view of thousands there, the previous cheering seemed as a whisper. No such ovation had ever before been heard in Paris.

Retail Dealers Victims of Fraud

Merchants Are Warned to Be On the Look Out for Crook.

A crook representing himself as Henry Anderson, traveller for a firm which he calls the "Golden Gate Silk Mills," San Francisco, Cal." carries a line of very fine silk hose, and is putting over on the unsuspecting retail dealers a story to the effect that his firm has a shipment of hosiery on hand at Kenora (or perhaps some other point) C.O.D. $360.00, which has been refused by the original consignee. This shipment he endeavours to sell on the understanding that he will have the shipment reforwarded to the new purchaser C.O.D. for the amount, but before leaving he usually prevails upon the purchaser to advance him $20.00 or more—giving as his reason that his expense money is running low— on the understanding that the amount advanced is to be deducted from the purchase price of the goods. But there are no goods, and the dealer is out his money.

To the knowledge of the Dominion Express Company this fraud has been perpetrated on four different people during the past few weeks.

PRESIDENT IS IN PARIS

Wilson and His Party Reached French Capital This Morning.

WARM WELCOME

(By Fred S. Ferguson.)

PARIS, December 14. — President Wilson arrived in Paris, the present capital of the world, at 10.01 o'clock this morning. His arrival was heralded by the booming of guns throughout the city. The vast crowds in the Champs Elysees set up a tremendous cheer. Tremendous crowds lined the entire way from the railway station to Prince Murat's palace, which will be the first foreign home of an American president.

Premier Clemenceau and General Pershing were also lionized. Many of the women in the throngs wept openly and it was possible to distinguish a significant moisture in the eyes of some of the older men.

In addition to the crowds in the streets, great masses of people filled every window and available vantage point, including the roofs. Doughboys clung to the trees and captured German guns along the Champs Elysees and the Place Concorde, looking like nothing quite so much as clusters of human grapes.

"Vive Wilson."

President and Mrs. Poincare, greeted the American executive and his wife on the station platform. The two presidents entered one carriage and their wives another. Both of the carriages were decorated with flowers.

As the presidential party left the station they received a tremendous ovation from the crowds. Their carriages started up the streets, preceded by mounted guards, and with carriages containing other members of the official retinue in their wake.

A great cry of "Vive Wilson," was raised. The crowds were thickly sprinkled with doughboys and poilus, who shouted and whistled.

President Wilson raised his hat, as both he and Mrs. Wilson smiled acknowledgement of the greeting.

RUSSIANS ON THE MARCH

Bolsheviki Troops Advancing on a Front of 400 Miles.

SLIGHT SUCCESS

PARIS, Dec. 14.—Bolshevik troops, consisting of eleven infantry divisions and cavalry and artillery, is marching toward Central Europe on a front of nearly four hundred miles from the Gulf of Finland to the Dneiper river, according to despatches from Berne. The advance began on Nov. 11, the day the German armistice was signed. German soldiers, advices say, are joining the Bolsheviks, who are reported to be destroying everything in their path and capturing material left behind by the Germans in their withdrawal westward.

Reports from European capitals in the last week have reported the Bolshevikl troops advancing throughout Estonia, which lies immediately south of the Gulf of Finland. The Russians were said to be meeting with but slight success.

$150 DAMAGES TO JOHN R. DOBLE FOR DAMAGES TO AUTO

Said it Was in Perfect Condition When Seized by Bailiff; Mr. Gordon Called It a Pile of Junk.

John R. Doble, a commercial traveller, formerly of Peterboro, now living in Toronto, was awarded $150 damages by a jury in the County Court, before Judge Huycke last night, against Harold Laplante for injuries to his automobile in July, 1917, while it was held under seizure by Mr. Laplante acting as bailiff. Mr. G. N. Gordon conducted the defense, and Mr. James G. Guise-Bagley appeared for the plaintiff.

Mr. Doble's total claim was $751.74 which he compiled as follows: $300 for depreciation of the car, $100 compensation for its use by the defendant, $220 compensation for deprivation, $3.89 for repairs, $15.85 for articles missing, $60 for repairs that were not done. He bought the automobile in 1914. It was then second hand, and he was told that it had been run at least 3,000 miles during the previous year. On July 14th, 1917, after three years' use, the car was seized at Sunderland, by Mr. Laplante, acting as bailiff for the McCaskey Systems Limited, who held a mortgage on it. It was a Hupmobile and rather than permit strange hands to run it to Peterboro, Mr. Doble drove it himself and left it at Pulkinghorn's garage. He denied that he gave the defendant permission to use it while it was under seizure.

Although it was of the 1913 vintage, Mr. Doble declared that the car was in perfect condition when it was seized at Sunderland. On August 14, 1917, Mr. Doble sued the McCaskey Systems, claiming from them $545, and got judgement for $50.

It was then alleged to be worth $850, but three experts valued it at no more than $350.

"Times have changed since then," Mr. Gordon commented. "Having failed to get anything out of the McCaskey people he turned upon Laplante as a last resort."

"Why it's extortionate to ask $700 damages for that moving pile of junk," he added.

Mr. Doble stated the first time he saw the automobile after the seizure was on July 20th when he returned from Toronto. It had been driven by the bailiff, he declared, and had developed various wheezes.

Mr. Gordon said that Mr. Doble had damaged the car on the road from Sunderland by driving into the ditch, and that other weaknesses were due to old age and long usage.

The hearing of this case was expedited by an agreement between the opposing counsel. Mr. Bagley said that his chief witness was ill with the influenza. Mr. Gordon agreed not to put in a defence if Mr. Bagley would close his case at that stage. The significance of this manoeuvre by the defence may be understood from the fact that Mr. Gordon was apparently alone—that he had no witnesses whatever in court. He also made a motion to the effect that since action had been previously brought against McCaskey Systems Limited, for whom the defendant had acted as bailiff, the latter was thereby released as a "tort-feasor."

The jury was as follows: George Spencer, Belmont; Peter Grady, North Monaghan; Augustus Borland, Otonabee; Harry Elmhirst, Otonabee; Hugh Givens, Harvey; Joseph Rylott, Belmont; Gordon Cameron, Otonabee; H. A. Thistlewaite, Asphodel; John J. Bickell, Smith; Herb Darling, Smith; Dennis Cosgrave, Ennismore; Thomas Armstrong, Smith.

The hearing of Mr. Gordon's motion was set for this morning at 11 o'clock.

Wilson Will Insist That League of Nations Form Part of Peace Treaty

Delegates Not Expected to Convene as Masters of Any Nations, But as Representatives of a New World—Preliminary Conferences May be Confidential—Peace Issues Are Numerous and Confusing.

UNITED PRESS CORRESPONDENT WITH WILSON

(By Robert J. Bender.)
Copyright 1918 by The United Press.

PARIS, Dec. 14.—President Wilson's whole effort will be directed at obtaining a "Just and Lasting Peace."

The American delegation to the peace conference, in carying out this principle, stands squarely on these fundamental conditions:

FIRST—The league of nations munst be a part of the treaty in order to ensure a square deal for all peoples concerned. The President, lacking support of such a league, would feel that American participation in the negotiations is hardly worth while.

SECOND—Freedom of the seas must be one of the chief principles established through the league of nations, thus making it unnecessary for America to build a navy big enough to ensure her against arbitrary action by any nation.

THIRD—Just claims against Germany for her crimes must be ascertained and then the possibilities of payment and the method of collection determined.

FOURTH—While the preliminary conferences may be confidential, the final conclusion should be reached publicly.

FIFTH—All peace delgates should sit as representatives of the new world, not as masters of any nations. Any other attitude would mean that consumation of peace would leave hatreds which might breed future wars.

ON PROBATION.

The American confreres are understood to favour inclusion of Germany in the league of nations—but only on probation until it is proven that she can be trusted.

The President will approach the conference with the utmost frankness and by such processes as will not involve any unnecessary antagonism. It is perfectly clear, however, that for him the strategic centres of the whole business are the questions of the league of nations, indemnities, and freedom of the seas.

The first task of the President will be to get acquainted with the Allies' Premiers, lay out the preliminary lines of procedure, and attempt to clear up any points of difference.

There has been some talk of a prearranged programme having been formulated by Premiers Lloyd George, Clemenceau and Orlando, at the recent London conference, but it is assumed the understandings reached there were only provisional and for the purpose of supplying a concrete basis for discussion. It is understood, among other things, they concerned the indemnity to be exacted from Germany.

GERMANY MUST PAY.

The President feels strongly that Germany must pay for her crimes, but it is known he believes that the right way to collect — a way that would be consistent with high principles—is to determine just claims, then the method and possibility of payment; not to ascertain what Germany has that can be taken, and then parcel it out.

There are no difference between the view of President Wilson and Allied Premiers regarding the wrongs done by Germany. The only possible difference is regarding the method and scale of payment.

It is known that President is determined that an agreement for the league of nations shall be embodied in the treaty, for the reason that the treaty would be valueless were the league left to subsequent conference.

Clear Definition

The President is also known to be convinced there must be a clear definition of freedom of the seas which pivots on the league of nations. He does not intend there shall be any lawless freedom of the seas, or exposure of any nation to its enemies, because the league could close the seas for enforcement of international covenents. Judgment is reserved by some governments on this question but the American delegates expect all doubts to be clarified through discussion. A decision is also expected to be reached concerning reduction and apportionment of armaments both on land and sea, making it unnecessary for America to build a vast navy. It is believed that American public opinion, which is expected to favor construction of a navy equal to that of Great Britain, if the league of nations is not formed, will play a most important part as a determined factor in the discussions. . . . . .

President Wilson will point out that he does not insist on unqualified freedom of the seas. But that he will insist that no single nation or group of nations shall be able to restrict this freedom. . . . . .

Plain speaking is certain in the preliminary conference next week, but the Americans anticipate the most friendly co-operation from the Allied Premiers. The President does not regard himself as master of the situation, though his position is strong because of Allies acceptance of his fourteen principles and of the expected support of neutrals.

The President is known to feel that delegates are not sitting as masters of any nations, but as representatives of New World, to determine greatest issues of all time. And he believes that any peace which would leave hatreds as breaking ground for future wars would be a repitition of congress of Vienna and a dark spot in history.

Social Evening at the Empress

Proceeds Will be for Peterboro Health Association.

The public is asked to note that the annual social evening of the Nurses' Supervision Committee of the Peterborough Health Association will be held on Friday evening next, Dec. 27th, in the Empress Hotel, through the kindness of Mr. Graham, and will take the form of a bridge party and dance. The proceeds are to be used for the supplying of nourishment to invalids throughout the city, a work that has been faithfully carried on in the past by the Health Association with a maximum of results and a minimum of advertising. Amid the multiplicity of calls as a result of the war, the association has been performing its mission of mercy, and many a family has had reason to bless the association and its devoted district nurses for the help that has been given in the time of sickness and distress. It is a noble work that deserves the support of the entire community, and the appreciation of the citizens should be shown by a large attendance at next Friday's social.

Disseminating the Influenza

Strange Discovery Made by the Russian Bolsheviks—The Explanation.

(Special to Examiner.)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14. — "Spanish influenza is being disseminated by the imperialists in order to exterminate the proletariat.' This is the discovery made by the Russian Bolsheviki, according to the official advices received here. It is explained in this way.

Long working hours, short food rations and crowded living conditions are imposed upon the proletariat by the indifferent "Capitalists."

"In Russia, however, working people deal successfull with Spanish influenza," said the Bolsheviki investigator. The workers and peasants government has given the laborers a number of privileges. The workers receive increased rations, and they are moved from damp dark cellars into light dry quarters.

POLITICS IN GERMANY

The Political Situation in Rhineland is Becoming More Complicated Every Day

ELECTION DATE

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

COPENHAGEN, Dec. 14. — The Prussian government announces officially, according to a despatch from Berlin, that the elections to the Constituent Assembly of Prussia shall be held eight days after the elections for the German Constituent Assembly. The German government has not yet set a definite date for elections to the Constituent National Assembly. Unofficial reports have said they might be held early in February.

A resolution.

(Special to The Examiner.)

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 14.—Dismissal of the Ebert-Scheidemann government, giving the Soviets legislative powers, is advocated in resolutions adopted at a communist meeting held at Munich by Anti-Eisner factions, according to despatches from that city to-day. The resolution also asked that a revolutionary tribunal be established.

A New Element.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

COLOGNE, Dec. 14.—A new and striking element has been ejected into the already complicated political situation in Rhineland by the alleged organization of a secret party which is working for the annexation of German territory to France. Overtures will be made to the French Government. It is said to take Rhineland into France on the same basis as Alsace-Lorraine. This is only one development in an intensely interesting problem being solved in the rich country west of the Rhine with Cologne as the political capital. There is, in the first place throughout Rhineland, a double-headed government composed of revolutionists on one side and officials of the imperialistic regime on the other, who for the moment are working more or less together for the common good. In Cologne for example the old burgomaster and his staff are still at their posts in the city hall, while nearby are offices of the revolutionary committee. The second group is composed of the Catholic or Centrist party which is said to desire a Rhinish-Westphalian republic.

A Barrage of Cake and Coffee

This Was the Experience of a Lakefield Soldier.

LAKEFIELD, Dec. 14.—Lieut. Gordon Davies, son of Rev. and Mrs. Davies, of Lakefield, has recently passed through some events of thrilling interest, in France and Belgium. Just before the armistice was signed, Lieut. Davies and his platoon were the first soldiers to enter one town after the Huns had retreated. "Then," he says, "we faced a barrage of cake and coffee, of flowers and embraces, that defies description." An elderly woman was brought up by a sergeant, asking permission of the lieutenant to visit friends in another part of the town.

"This gives an idea," he declares, "of the terrible strictness of Hun rule in that town for four years."

The last letter from Lieut. Davies was dated Nov. 16th, five days after the armistice was signed.

It was written at a comfortable home in the prosperous town of Quaregnon, three miles west of Mons. The censorship having been raised, the soldiers are now permitted to tell where they are and what they are doing. The Canadian corps is to be a part of the army of occupation, and they are moving towards the German border and the Rhine River. "If the Hun subs. destroyed three million tons of bacon, they can't stop us getting the Rhine'."

CONDITIONS IN CANADA AS VIEWED BY MISS MOWRY

"It is positively wicked the food we have in Canada," Nursing Sister Bertha M. Mowry, who returned this week from England, told the Examiner yesterday. Since she returned to England early in the year she had not seen white bread until arriving back in Canada.

Miss Mowry is enthusiastic in her praise of the Army Medical Corps, which, she says, is perfectly seen. Speaking of the current idea that the troops coming out are badly treated, she said that in the ship she came out on, there were 800 troops who, although kept in the hold, were each provided with good beds and evidently comfortable. She saw absolutely nothing to complain of. Miss Mowry reports for duty on January 3rd.

THE DOCTOR'S PART.

In the course of his eloquent address before the Canadian Club the other night, Hon. Dr. Cody paid a glowing tribute not only to the efficient work but to the sacrifices made by the members of the medical profession in Canada, who unhesitatingly placed their knowledge and skill at the disposal of their country when the crisis came. This acknowledgement of the part played in the war by Canadian doctors is welcomed because the sacrifices made by many of the medical profession have not been understood or appreciated by their fellow-citizens. There has been no profiteering among the doctors who enlisted for service. Men whose income, as Dr. Cody pointed out, ran up into thousands of dollars a year, threw their civilian business to the winds and served faithfully and unmurmuringly at the meagre pay of a captain or major. Their practice will have disappeared by the time they come home, and they will have to commence afresh. All honour to the medical men of Canada; they have played the game and deserve well of their fellow-citizens.

THE NEED OF NEW MEN.

A week from Monday will be nomination day. If we are to elect in Peterborough a capable council for next year there is little more than a week left in which to secure the candidature of the right men. So far few new names, save those of the Trades and Labour Council candidates have been mentioned. The members of this year's council, it may be expected, although all have not definitely committed themselves, will be found in the field again, but there is a disappointing lack of new material.

Citizens who realize the serious nature of the problems that are to be handled during the coming year and the need of developing Peterborough on better and broader lines, would welcome a much larger field of candidates than is at present in sight. It certainly cannot be claimed that in the names already before the public the best ability of Peterborough has been exhausted. There are among our citizens many men who have the qualifications necessary to make good aldermen. During the next week it should be the aim of the ratepayers of Peterborough to see that some of these men are induced to offer their services to the city. It is admitted that civic service is a thankless task—it means sacrifices of time and of other things, but in the present crisis those who have the ability to serve their fellow-citizens should be animated by the spirit of the Canadian soldiers who faced all the sacrifices and hardships of warfare to fight for Canada and the Empire. There is a clear call for good men to offer themselves for the benefit of Peterborough.

Let us see to it that our fighting men come back to a better, more progressive, more appreciative city, than they left.

GOVERNMENT BY THE PEOPLE.

It has been truly said that Socialism and Bolshevism are direct descendants of poverty and want, and in looking back over the history of the world there can be no wonder that it is so. The revolutions in Russia and Germany are cases which go a long way to prove it, and particularly the one in Russia. How much poverty and want played their parts in Germany may be a moot point, but they had a decided influence. The idea running through both Socialism and Bolshevism is "Government by the People," but this is a phrase which has immense danger attached to it, and which self-seeking demagogues can, and will turn, and have already turned, to their own benefit, and the distress of their countries. In speaking of Socialism it must be remembered that we are doing so only so far as it is in accordance with Bolshevism, for many of the objects of Socialism in its higher forms are excellent; but as Mr. Lloyd George says: "Bolshevism is Poison."

The danger to the world is Bolshevism; its supporters want to destroy society as it has evolved through the centuries into its present form. The world must be governed by the workers. The connection with the I.W.W. can be seen in this; and most people know enough of this body not to want to hav anything to do with it. It is fortunate that the Bolsheviki have given in Russia proofs of what Government by the People or the Workers really means when carried out to its extremity. No doubt Lenine and his fellow rascals were in the pay of the Huns, but that fact simply means that the Huns knew how to make use of Bolshevism for their own ends. The workers" took charge of the country—and wrecked its finances and industries. They asked preposterous wages, in one instance the amount demanded was 163 million rubles while the profits of the concern were only eighteen. Land was to be divided up; so many peasants sold theirs; thinking they could get both money and land. Then every one must have read of the awful murders of the "bourgeoisie" or so-called ruling classes; and of the killing of all those who oppose the Workers.

So the story might be continued; but the point we wish to emphasize is that in view of the activities of the Bolsheviki in Canada, and all over the world, every one must be careful to study for themselves what "Government by the People" really means. In the British Empire the peoples have the means of saying how they will be governed; and no amount of wild talk should lead them to upset these means without being sure that it would not lead to the results seen in Russia and Germany to-day.—Kingston Standard.

EMPLOYMENT FOR SOLDIERS.

The requests made by the Soldiers' Aid Commission of the manufacturers of the city in regard to finding employment for the returning soldiers seem on the face of them reasonable, and it expected that the heads of the different industrial concerns will co-operate readily with the commission. Manufacturers are asked first to see that as far as possible they will reinstate their employ in their own positions on their return and secondly that when there are vacancies to be filled the preference shall be given to the men who have done their bit overseas. In many cases employees of various firms were promised that their jobs would be ready for them when they came back, so that is a simple matter of keeping faith with these particular soldiers. In other cases men eager to grab a rifle and get into the big game overseas did not have a thought to their positions, but employers of such men, even where there was not an understanding given, should ot hesitate to restore them to their positions when they get back, if such a course is at all possible.

Incidentally in connection with the work of the Soldier's Aid Commission some good advice given by Harris Turner, editor of the breezy weekly publication "Turner's Weekly," is well worth quoting. Mr. Turner went overseas as a private with the Princess Pats and lost his sight through being wounded. He is a prominent western membre of the G.W.V.A. and his opinion of this will be respected by all returned men. Mr. Turner says:

"A great responsibility rest on the soldier who gets a job through this agency. If he falls down on the job he has accepted, makes it harder for every returned man who comes after him. When he does not do his best, he is penalizing his comrades who have not yet returned. If he does his best, he makes it easier for all those who came after him. If he is not prepared to do his utmost to fill the position he secures through the agency of the Commission, he should keep away from the Commission, for he will killl it, if he shows himself in sufficiently large numbers.

"If a man realizes that all the agencies and schemes in the world will not bolster him up, when he is not prepared to do what he can, the question of the difficulties surrounding the demobilization of the men will be much easier to answer than it is now. Discharged men will lose their positions from time to time. If they lose them unjustly the matter should be brought home forcibly to the employer who committted the injustice, but if the dismissal of the veteran was the veteran's own inability to fill the duties of the job satisfactorily, then he is hurting the entire cause of the returned soldier unless he keeps his mouth shut. As a general rule, an employer does not hire a man unless he wants one and it is just as general a rule that an employer does not fire a man unless the man fails to do the work satisfactorily. If a man is sacked, let him take a good look at his own end of the deal before he lays a complaint against his employer. If he does not carry on properly on his job, gets fired, and then raises a horrible row about the way returned soldiers are treated, he ultimately brings discredit upon everyone who tries to help him. If, on the ather hand—and there have been such cases—a man is given just treatment in the matter of wages, hours of employment, etc., or if the employer takes advantage of his disability to impose upon him, then the soldier will find plenty of support, strong enough to see that his grievances are rectified."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

President Wilson in his voyage to Europe passed over the grave of the Lusitania. The reflection that the British navy has put an end to such terrible atrocities as the sinking of this great liner, may well have made the American leader consider again the question of the freedom of the seas.

Incidentally in spite of the expectation that President Wilson may introduce into the peace negotiations a proposal to do away with the blockade, it is interesting to note that the United States naval programme calls for an immense battle fleet by 1925.

The good old Olympic on which no fewer than 68,416 members of the Canadian Expeditionary force crossed the Atlantic has added another successful voyage to her credit. The big liner, known in shipping cricles as the "Old Reliable," has been as regular as a ferry in spite of the submarine peril.

The African tribes in the colonies formerly owned by Germany are pleading against a return of these lands to German rule. They need not worry—the "blond beasts" will never get another chance to display their brutality for the benefit of the natives.

"You have protected the homeland from enemy invasion," Herr Ebert told the Prussian Guards on their arrival in Berlin. Perhaps the German Premier had not heard that the Allies had reached the Rhine.

With aviation added to the curriculum of Canadian universities, there will be one subject at least in which students cannot afford to fall down.

All four Canadian divisions, as well as the Canadian cavalry brigade, are to do police duty in Germany. That may be necessary, but who keeps the Forestry Battalions in France?

An Exposition of Commission Form of Government and Present Administration as Represented by the Peterboro Council

The Operation of the Municipal Act is Varied by the Peterboro "Special Act"---Electors in This City Must Vote for at Least Four Candidates---The Commission Form of Government.

THE CITY MANAGER PLAN IN OTHER PLACES

In Ontario a municipal council has authority to pass such by-laws and make such regulations for the health, safety, morality and welfare of the inhabitants of the municipality in matters not specifically provided for in the Municipal Act, as may be deemed expedient and not contrary to law. This looks like a very wide scope for legislation, almost unlimited, but while it is not as wide as it might appear to be, the Council is the municipal body which has authority to legislate on these matters. In addition, the Council appoints the assessment officials and collects the taxes for the municipality.

The Council.

The Council is also an administrative body; that is, it not only enacts local laws and levies taxes, but it also appoints the officials who do the work for the municipality, directs what work shall be done and how it shall be done, and directs and supervises the carrying out of the work. This administrative work is largely done by committees and through appointed officials, but the committees and officials only have such authority as it is given to them by the Council, except certain officials, such as the assessor and collector, who have statutory duties.

Other Boards.

But the Council does not have charge of all the affairs of the municipality. The schools are controlled entirely by boards, the members of which are elected; the Public Library by a Board, some of the members of which are appointed by the Council; the Police Force by a Board, composed of the Mayor, the County Judge and the Police Magistrate, and the Isolation Hospital and other health matters by the Board of Health, of which the Mayor and the Medical Officer of Health are ex-officio members and the other three members are appointed by the Council. For these Boards the Council levies and collects the taxes for the moneys they require. The Council has no control over the amounts they spend on the services within their several jurisdictions, but must levy in taxes the sums the School Board and Public Library Board ask for and must pay the expenses of the Board of Commissioners of Police and Board of Health. In Peterborough there is also a City Trust, established many years ago by a special act. This Trust, managed by five commissioners appointed by the Council, administers the real estate owned by the city and also the money raised to pay interest on debentures and for sinking funds to pay the debentures when they fall due.

Charity Board.

The Central Charity Board is a body established about twenty years ago by the City Council here to administer the municipal charitable funds. It is composed of a representative from each church congregation and some of the charitable societies, and the Council, instead of giving charity directly; makes a grant to this society and leaves such matters in its hands.

In Ontario the Municipal Act provides that the councils shall be composed of a Mayor and three Aldermen for each ward, or where the Council by by-law so provides two aldermen for each ward, or where by by-law it is provided that the aldermen shall be elected by general vote the number shall be one alderman for every 1,000 population or the same as if they were elected by wards. And the Municipal Act provides that the Mayor and Aldermen shall all be elected each year.

Peterborough Special Act.

There are certain cities where the provisions of the Municipal Act are varied by special acts. Peterborough is one of them. The Peterborough Special Act provides that there shall be ten aldermen, that the Mayor shall be elected every year, and that the Aldermen shall be elected for two years, five retiring each year. If the Aldermen are elected by wards then there are two for each ward, one being elected each year, and if by general vote five are elected in that way each year. After several years of election by wards, this city will return to the general vote system next January, and ten aldermen will then be elected, the five receiving the highest number of votes for two years and the other five for one year. The Peterborough Act also provides that each elector must vote for at least four candidates, otherwise the ballot is spoiled and is not counted.

The foregoing is a bare outline of our form of municipal government. In the United States a form of civic government known as commission government has been adopted in a number of cities.

"Checks and Balances."

On that side of the line during the colonial period the form of municipal government was much the same as it is in England, and has been in Canada. But in the nineteenth century, the cities modelled their government on the Federal plan, and a system of "checks and balances" was adopted with the separation, to a considerable extent, of the legislative and administrative branches. There was a Council, and in some cases with two chambers, with a Mayor who had power to recommend and to veto legislation. The democratic wave also led to the election of a number of the officials who had nothing to do with legislation, but were administrative officials entirely. This system resulted in delay, friction and diffusion of responsibility. Party politics was also introduced and assumed control, and the State political organizations took an active part in municipal elections. The ballots had party designations, and the electors voted the party ticket, and the spoils system was in full vogue, with the result that those officials who were not elected were changed with each change in party success in the municipality. Gross abuses naturally arose under such a system. In the closing years of the century there was a tendency to concentrate the administrative powers in the hands of the Mayor, and to curtail the powers of the Council, and give the Mayor power to appoint many officials who were formerly elected, but this did not weaken the party or spoils system, if indeed it did not aggravate the evil.

Commission Government.

This century saw the birth of the commission form of government. It originated in Galveston, Texas, as most people know. That city was swept by a storm and flood, which threatened the destruction of the city in a financial as well as a physical sense. The first commission was composed of three commissioners appointed by the Governor of the State and two elected by the voters of the city. This form was decided to be unconstitutional, and since then the five commissioners have been elected. The Galveston Commission undoubtedly was a great improvement in Galveston as compared with the former city government, and other cities adopted a similar system. There have been variations made in different cities, but the main lines followed are that three to five commissioners are elected who have all the legislative and administrative powers formerly vested in the Council. The municipal departments are divided into groups, and each commissioner is given charge of a group. In some places they are elected to administer certain departments, and in others the appointments as head of the departments are made by the Commission after each election. Difficulties were found in this system in some cities, as the election of men to positions requiring professional training, skill and experience did not work well. Besides, each commissioner being head of a department made a five-headed executive and inconveniences followed from the diffusion of executive powers. Each commissioner was primarily interested in his own department, and there was a lack of the expected co-ordination of departments and duplication and waste due to a want of centralized administrative power.

City Manager Plan.

These considerations led to the city manager plan. Scranton, Va., was the first municipality in the United States to appoint a city manager. The laws of Virginia did not permit of the commission form of government, and the Council in 1908 appointed a city manager. The first city to have a commission and city manager was Sumter, S.C., in 1912, and other cities have adopted this system.

The commission and city manager plan is a small legislative body, possessing all the legal powers of the municipality, with the administrative power vested in a manager, who is appointed by and responsible to the legislative body.

Des-Moines System.

The commission form of government is often referred to as the Des-Moines system and the commission and city manager plan as the Dayton system. Of Des-Moines it has been said that "it was impossible to have a worse city government" than that city had before the change.

St. John, N.B., is, so far as I know, the only Canadian city that has this commission form of government, and it was adopted there in 1912. The St. John Charter follows pretty closely the Des-Moines plan. The Commission or Council consists of the Mayor and four commissioners or aldermen. No property qualification is required. The Mayor is elected for two years and the commissioners for four years, two retiring every second year. The departments are divided into five groups and one member of the commission is placed in charge of each group, while the Mayor exercises general supervision over all departments. Each commissioner may suspend an official in his department for thirty days or dismiss a head of a department and report to the commission, and the suspension or dismissal stands unless disapproved of by a majority of the commission. The non-elective heads of departments have power to appoint, suspend or dismiss subordinates.

The Candidates.

Each candidate for the office of Mayor or Commissioner must be nominated by not less than 25 electors. If there are more than two candidates for Mayor and more than twice as many candidates for the office of commissioner as are to be elected a "primary election" is held. The two candidates for the office of Mayor and the four candidates for the office of commissioner receiving the greatest number of votes, in the primary election, are deemed to be in nomination, and the final election is held two weeks later, at which the Mayor and two commissioners are elected. The Mayor is required to give sufficient time to the business of the city and the commissioners are required to give their whole time and not to engage in any other business or profession. The Mayor and each commissioner receives a salary of $3,000.

May Be "Recalled."

While the Mayor is elected for two and the commissioners for four years they may be "recalled." Upon a petition signed by 15 per cent. of the voters being presented, asking for the recall of the Mayor or a commissioner an election must be held for the position, and the person sought to be removed is a candidate again unless he requests otherwise.

A by-law may be presented to the commission by 25 per cent. of the voters and the commission must either pass it or submit it to a vote of the electors. This is known as the initiative.

A by-law passed by the commission, except such as relates to the immediate preservation of the public health, safety or peace, shall not go into effect for twenty days after it has been passed. If within that time 20 per cent. of the voters petition against it it shall be suspended, and the commission must repeal it or submit it to a vote of the electors. This is the referendum.

The Common Clerk of St. John wrote on June 4th, 1918: "I would also say that the commission form of government appears to be giving satisfaction, as two years ago a vote was taken as to whether or not the city should continue the commission form of government or go back to the old common council government, and commission government was sustained by a majority of more than 50 per cent. of the total vote polled."

Various Forms.

There are variations in the form of commission government in different cities. Galveston, Texas, has not the initiative, referendum or recall. In Denton, Texas, the chairman of the commission is not elected, but the commissioners appoint one of themselves as chairman, and there is a manager appointed by the commission. In Cadillac, Mich., where they have the commission-manager plan, the commissioners are not paid, and they have preferential voting in the elections instead of a primary election. In Jackson, Mich., a petition signed by 10 per cent. only of the voters is required for the initiative and 15 per cent. for the referendum or recall. In several United States cities the recorder or police judge and justice of the peace are still elected. In Des-Moines 25 per cent. of the voters are required to sign a recall, and if 25 per cent. petition for an initiative or referendum, the by-law must be passed or the vote must follow at once, but if 10 per cent. and less than 25 per cent. sign the petition the by-law, if not passed by the commission, need not be submitted to a vote until the time of the next election.

Civil Service.

The DesMoines plan also provides for a civil service commission, and cities which adopt commission government of between 7,000 and 25,000 population may, and those of 25,000 or over must, have a civil service commission. The civil service commission is appointed by the city commission and holds examinations of candidates for positions in April and October. The ten candidates for each department who have the highest standing in the examinations are reported to the city commission and appointments must be made from them. Any official who is dismissed may appeal to the civil service commission.

Why Has No Other Instrument Been Subjected to the Tone Test?

There are many devices for the reproduction of sound—more than ninety makes, it is said. Many are widely advertised. Why has but one been subjected to the Tone Test? The reason is clear. There is but one which can meet the Tone Test and that is

The NEW EDISON
"THE PHONOGRAPH WITH A SOUL"

The Tone Test is the supreme and searching test of an instrument's quality. In a Tone Test, the artist stands beside the instrument and plays in direct comparison with the New Edison's RE-CREATION of his violin. Occasionally the artist ceases while the instrument continues alone. Can you tell when the break occurs? That is the question. Can you distinguish the living tone from the RE-CREATED? More than two million people have sought to do so. Not one has succeeded. More than 1500 Public Tone Tests have been conducted. Always the New Edison has emerged successfully.

Come into our Store and satisfy yourself about the New Edison. We will gladly demonstrate it.

Kidney Weakness Produced by Spanish "Flu"

One great lesson we can all learn from the Influenza Epidemic is the value of prevention—the vital necessity of remedying all diseases the minute the symptoms appear.

As the result of being attacked by Spanish Influenza many persons have been left with weakened or inactive kidneys. The high fever which prevails during the period of sickness is no doubt responsible for this weakened condition, and in order to restore the kidneys to their former state of health a healing tonic is necessary.

Gin Pills are the acknowledged remedy for all Kidney or Bladder Troubles, and Gin Pills taken during convalescence have proved themselves to be the great remedy for rectifying the Kidney weaknesses left by Spanish "Flu."

From all parts of Canada letters are coming in to us stating that Gin Pills have relieved the sufferers from the annoyance and worry caused by weakened kidneys. People are daily finding that the quickest and surest way to remedy the detrimental effects left in the kidneys by Spanish "Flu"—is to use Gin Pills. At this meeting a Local Committee of the District Epworth League was formed with Rev. A. J. Thomas as chairman and Mr. N. Ireland Secretary-Treasurer

The members of this Local Committee are: Rev. B. Greatrix, Rev. R. A. Whattam, Mr. Nellist Rev. F. E. Malott Mr. N. Ireland, Rev. A. J. Thomas, Mr. C. S. Thompson, Mr. J. Kennett, Rev. Wm. Higgs, Rev. A. McLaughlin, Mrs. R. J. Weir, Misses A. Elson and Sargent.

It was decided to hold a rally of the leagues of the city in George Street church, Monday evening, January 27, 1919, following the District Convention, which will be held in the same church in the afternoon.

Series of Debates.

It was suggested by the chairman that a series of debates be held between the four city Epworth Leagues viz. George Street, St. James, Trinity and Mark Street. After discussion, the meeting voted in favor of holding these debates, the debaters to be bona-fide members of the League which they represent. It was suggested that Mark Street and St. James debate on a Monday night in January, and George Street and Trinity at a combined meeting of these two societies to be held at George street on February 17th, the winners to debate at a place and date to be decided upon later. Rev. F. E. Malott and Rev. R. A. Whattam, were appointed a sub-committee to select the subjects and generally supervise this series of debates.

Regular Attendance

A plan to stimulate more regular attendance on the part of members of our City Leagues was suggested. This was the donating of a Banner to the local League having the highest percentage of members in attendance at meetings. The plan of this contest which was adopted by the Local Committee, is to begin the first Monday night in January, and at the end of three months the Banner will be presented to the winning League and held by it for the following three months. If one Society succeeds in holding it for three consecutive quarters of the year this League will be entitled to keep the Banner. The three summer months, July, August and September, will not be included. The Secretary was asked to communicate with the Leagues and explain the plan fully to them.

AN EXPOSITION OF COMMISSION FORM OF GOVERNMENT

All candidates for the office of city commissioner must publish a statement of their campaign expenses. The scale of salaries in the DesMoines plan (and enacted by the State Legislature are as follows:

Population.	Mayor.	Commissioner.
7,000 to 10,000	$ 600	$ 450
10,000 to 15,000	1,200	900
15,000 to 25,000	1,500	1,200
25,000 to 40,000	2,500	1,800
40,000 to 60,000	3,000	2,500
60,000 or more	3,500	3,000

In Topeka, Ka., the commission failed (1914) to provide sufficient sinking funds, which is reminiscent of the old form of government in some other places.

In Western Canada.

In several western Canada cities there is what is called a commission government, but it is more like what is known in the United States as the city manager plan. In Edmonton two commissioners are appointed by the Council and they have control of the administration of all the departments. In Regina there is one such commissioner appointed by the Council and the Mayor acts with him. In Red Deer, Alberta, the Mayor and the secretary-treasurer are the commissioners. In Westmount, Que., there are a Mayor and five councillors and they appoint a manager.

In England, where municipal government is generally very satisfactory, the Council consists of a Mayor, councillors and aldermen. Three councillors are elected from each ward, and for a term of three years, one retiring each year. The aldermen are appointed by the Council for six years, one retiring each year. There are one-third as many appointed aldermen as elected councillors. They all meet together and have equal powers. The Mayor is appointed by the Council from its members. The administrative work is done largely by committees and through permanent officials.

Board of Control.

The Ontario Municipal Act makes provision for a Board of Control in cities with a population of over 45,000. The Mayor and four controllers elected every year by general vote, constitute the Board of Control and are members of the Council, the aldermen being elected in the usual way. In cities of between 45,000 and 100,000 population the salaries of controllers are limited to $1,500. The Act provides that the Board of Control shall prepare the estimates of expenditures and no expenditure shall be made that is not provided for; it shall prepare specifications for and award all contracts; inspect and report to the Council upon all municipal work being carried on; nominate all officers required to be appointed by the Council and recommend the salaries of all officers and clerks; dismiss or suspend any head of department and report the same to the Council; direct by whom and in what manner subordinate officers and employees shall be appointed and employed, unless this is covered by a by-law of the Council; submit by-laws to the Council, and amalgamate departments and sub-departments, and perform such other duties as may be imposed upon it by the Council. The duties assigned to the Board shall be discharged exclusively by it, except the submission of by-laws to the Council, and the amalgamation of departments, but the Council can, in most matters, set aside or vary the action of the Board by a two-thirds vote of the members present and voting, or it may by a majority vote refer back to the Board the matter for reconsideration.

Toronto, Ottawa, Winnipeg and other cities have Boards of Control. In Tornoto the Council committees are all retained as before the Board of Control system was adopted, but in Ottawa the committees were dropped. London has decided to abolish the Board of Control.

Guelph had a special act passed this year in regard to the government of that city. They had Boards of Water Commissioners, of Light and Heat Commissioners, of Parks Management, of Sewerage and Public Works Commissioners, and of Directors of the Guelph Radial Railway. All these boards are to be abolished at the end of this year (1918), except the Board of Light and Heat Commissioners, which is to be composed of the Mayor and two commissioners appointed by the Council for two years, one retiring each year. The City Council will be composed of eighteen aldermen elected by general vote for three years, six retiring each year, and they will each year elect from their number a Mayor. The City Clerk is made a member of all committees of the Council, without the right to vote, and it is made his duty to make recommendations to the committees and to keep them advised of the financial and other needs of the city. The committee appointed by the Guelph Council to consider a form of government recommended the election of twelve councillors and the appointment by the Council of six aldermen, following the English system, but this was not carried out.

Familiar Arguments.

Some of the arguments used in favour of the commission form of government are that the combination of the legislative and administrative functions results in closer co-operation between the legislative and executive branches; that the changes in membership under the old form were too frequent to permit of carrying out a settled policy; that a large number of members caused delays in doing business; that when electing a smaller number to do the business of the city the electors will be more careful in their selection; that with the smaller number each member will be more impressed with the responsibility of the position; that with a longer term the city will get the benefit of an accumulation of knowledge and experience; that there will be less of the parliamentary style of doing business—less speechmaking—and more of the methods of a business board; and that there will be a better co-ordination of the departments and less waste.

Arguments opposed to the commission system are: That in Europe, where municipal government has attained its highest perfection, there are large city councils; that in the multitude of counsellors there is wisdom, and that the combined judgment of a larger council is safer and saner than that of a smaller group; that the smaller the council the greater is the influence of individual cranks, hobbies, prejudice and favouritism; that a larger council is safer from undue influence from outside parties and that it is harder for a ring or clique to secure control; that there is always more or less chronic dissatisfaction with government and that changes in administrative officials is wasteful and injurious.

A Single Head.

Some arguments used in favour of the manager plan are: That it creates a single administrative head, which is better than several heads; that it permits of expertness in administration where it is most needed—at the head; that it permits of permanence in office of the chief executive; that it provides for superior stability and continuity of personnel and policies; that it will result in better co-ordination of the departments; that it makes more feasible the carrying out of far-sighted objects extending over a period of years; that it allows of a larger commission or council for legislative purposes; that it makes positions on the council or commission more attractive for first-class citizens, as it gives more opportunities for usefulness without interfering with their private careers; and that it is still not a case of one-man power, as the manager is subject to the commission or council.

Some of the arguments against the manager plan are: The difficulty of finding one man competent to efficiently and satisfactorily administer the affairs of a city; that it does not guarantee a continuity of policy, as the manager may be changed at any time; that the manager may be engaged by a majority of the council or commission and that the dissatisfied minority will hamper him; that he may be interfered with by the council through outside influence; that when the council or commission administers the affairs of the city they are more fully cognizant of the needs and better able to provide for them in legislation; and that with competent heads of departments the manager is not needed.

A final word is put this way by one writer: Good government in any case is primarily a question of honest and capable men, sustained and encouraged by an active interest in municipal affairs on the part of the people.

Homewood Avenue Resident Recollects the Time When Wolves and Bears Haunted West End

Mr. John Stewart Will Celebrate His 82d Birthday Next Month—Was Born in Smith Township When Eggs Were Eight Cents a Dozen in Peterboro.

While every resident of the city watches the growth of Peterboro with keen interest, none have perhaps the same deep-rooted interest as the old residents. Few are left to-day who date their memories back to the days when the city was a swamp, and few are able to realize that our now flourishing George street was a few years ago only a muddy lane.

One link with the past who retains an excellent memory of every development of Peterboro from the early days, is Mr. John Stuart, 593 Homewood avenue.

An Early Settler.

Mr. Stuart was born in Smith Township in 1836, and celebrates his 82nd birthday in January. His earliest memories of Peterboro date back to the days when the city was a collection of rough wooden houses and George street an unkept highway in which the waggon wheels went to the hubs in the mud in wet seasons. The now fashionable west end only 60 years ago, and within Mr. Stuart's memory, was a wild wood, and where the bears and wolves strolled unmolested by civilization. Homewood avenue, Weller street, the west end of Charlotte street, were included in this district.

No Corporation.

In those days there was no corporation and practically no law for lesser offences. Men could get into a fight and get out of it as best they could Mr. Stuart remembers the coming of the first constable, who not only kept order, but ran his business at the same time.

Eggs at 8c Dozen.

The present day market prices are always a source of amusement to Mr. Stuart, as in his youth he well remembers his mother selling geese dressed ready for the oven for 25c each; eggs at 8 and 10c a dozen; and chickens at 10c each. He and his brother killed two steers for which they were glad to get 3c a pound. Hardwood of the first grade was sold cut in 2 foot lengths for $1 a cord. He remembers the first meat ever shipped out of Peterboro, which was at the time of the American war.

The only trouble about getting whiskey in the town, where to-day it is practically unprocurable, was that the supply too often ran out. The price was within the reach of all—50c a gallon for the best grades.

Veteran of '66.

When the Fenian raids broke out in '66, Mr. Stuart was one of the first to volunteer, with the late Major Lee, and has his medal. He said the people in this vicinity were very uneasy at the time and began to think of refuges should the Fenians come in as far as Peterboro.

The Trent Canal.

Mr. Stuart watched the progress of the Trent Canal from the days when it was only a political argument unheard of between elections. He remembers when dozens of different routes were suggested, the most likely one being to run straight from the Little Lake to Chemong Lake, cutting out the upper lakes entirely.

In the early fifties, at the Stuart farm, only a few miles out of the city, sheep had to be penned up at night, as wolves destroyed every sheep uncared for. Bears were a constant nuisance to his father, as they were very bold, coming often close to the house, and pulling down the stooks at night. Nobody, however, ever thought of being afraid of them. Deer were ordinary visitors about the farm.

Considering the rapid growth of the present city from a settlement of a few houses Mr. Stuart confidently expects great things of Peterboro in a few years.

Combats "Lodge" Scheme to Get Negroes North

State of Georgia Tries to Prevent Movement to Invite Immigration to Detroit.

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 14.—A well organized plan to get Southern negro laborers to Detroit is revealed in litigation which also echoes the efforts of the South to counteract inducements offered here.

The state of Georgia is spending much money to take back Boas Milbrook, a negro who cannot read or write, on a charge of forgery which involves $11. The litigation has been taken to the Supreme Court of Michigan.

The events leading to the legal battle occurred a year ago, when a local "organizer" appeared in the South and began the formation of "lodges" on plantations. The members were negroes only and the dues were ten cents a week.

When a lodge got $35 or so in the treasury it was expended in sending one of its members to Detroit. This member got work at $5 a day through the Boosters Club or a like negro organization in this city, which co-operated with the planation and other negroes.

As fast as other negroes arrived they began saving and with money the whole membership was soon in the North, and the particular plantation stripped of all its labor, no longer had even a "lodge."

The drain was so serious that an organized campaign was begun by plantation owners to break up the system. The present suit in this city is a step in this campaign. Detroit negroes say the suit is an effort to intimidate the Southern negroes and disrupt the exising "lodges."

Boas Milbrook was one of the negroes who came to Detroit from ville, Merriweather County, Georgia. He is said to have withdrawn the funds of the "lodge" from a bank with two other negroes acting as "financial committee." On the back of the check is the name "Robert Milbrook," which is that of Boas' father. Boas claims he does not know who signed it, and says he cannot write.

Boas Milbrook reached Detroit last May and obtained employment at $5 a day. The most he had ever got before was 65 cents. He began sending all his savings South to bring on other members of the "lodge."

The forgery charge came up a few weeks ago. Milbrook's attorney protested against the extradition papers, and got a writ of habeas corpus. The Wayne County Circuit Court refused the writ, which was taken to the Supreme Court, which reduced the bail from $2,000 to $55, and is reviewing the case. Milbrook is in jail.

Jury Awarded $525 Damages to Mr. and Mrs. Middleton

$450 for Wrongful Seizure of the George Street Store, and $75 for Seizure of Gramophone—Fairbairn and Beatty Jointly Assessed.

COUNTER CLAIM DISMISSED

By the verdict of a jury in the County Court early yesterday evening, Andrew Fairbairn and Charles Beatty were joinly ordered to pay $450 to Ernest W. Middleton for wrongful levy of distress and trespass upon the "Sugar Bowl" last September to recover $55 arrears in rent. On a second count Mrs. Middleton was awarded $75 against both Beatty and Fairbairn for the wrongful seizure of her gramophone in October. In his statement of claim, the plaintiff had asked for the stated sum of damages, and other compensation for his loss of business. Obviously the jury allowed the plaintiff full damages. In fact Mr. F. D. Kerr, council for the defendants, indicated to Judge Huycke that the combined assessments of $525 was $25 in excess of the Court's jurisdiction which he said was limited to $500 Mr. Jas. G. Guise-Bagley, solicitor for Mr. Middleton announced that he would be satisfied by reduction of the award of $500.

Mr. Fairbairn's counter-claim of $59 against Middleton was dismissed.

The salient features of the somewhat interesting case have already been sketched. Mr. Middleton heard the call of opportunity to open up an ice cream and soft drinks business last summer. He rented from Mr. Fairbairn the store at 450-460 George Street and gave it the rather fantastic name of the "Sugar Bowl," which was rather a challenge to fate in view of the severe restrictions on sugar because of the world shortage. The earlist prospects were so encouraging that the first "Sugar Bowl" begot the second on Hunter Street as the summer advanced. Business in the Hunter Street street proved a disappointment and the deficit drained the original "Bowl". Eventually the profits that were coming to former was closed and in September the George Street store was seized to provide $55 rent that was then overdue. Mr. Beatty acting as bailliff locked up the store, and Middleton's action was based on the contention that he was thereby deprived of his business. Although the store had been boarded up with a "two by four" scantling, a second seizure was made on October 4th for that month's rent which was payable in advance. It was then the gramophone was seized.

In his address to the jury, Mr. Bagley stated that the defendants had not only seized Middleton's store but also took possession of his business. "They absolutely crushed him," he said, "in fact put the whole thing on the rocks. They sold even his small tools which he used in making candy. The argument for the defense was "well poor Middleton he was on his last legs so we killed him.' Then in October they came along again and took the gramaphone. Because the Middleton's were ignorant of the law and didn't know their rights we are asked to assume that they consented to the whole proceedings."

Relic of Feudalism.

Seizure was a relic of feudal times, Mr. Bagley said, when a landlord had power over his tenant to do almost as he pleased. But if he avaiis himself of that law he must keep strictly within it. Counsel declared that this seizure had been carried out recklessly. If there had been any sympathy for Middleton, the defendants could have taken a few things and have set them aside, without shutting up the entire business.

Mr. Kerr's presentation of the defense was a skilful argument in favour of the defendants. Judge Huycke reviewed the evidence succinctly, indicating the crucial points to be considered.

The jury first returned a verdict assessing the $450 against Mr. Fairbairn alone, and the $75 against him and Mr. Beatty together. Judge Huycke suggested that they reconsider their decision, and on their return Mr. Beatty was included in the $450 assessment.

The Jury.

The jury was composed of the following: Ambrose Coughlin, Douro, foreman; David McGregor, 191 Antrim street; George Franks, Smith; J. D. Pearce, 490 Gilchrist street; Roy Chesney, Hall's Bridge; W. C. Stone, Burleigh; Frank Fligg, Smith; Joseph O'Connor, Ennismore; Robert White, Lakefield; Michael Murphy, 64 Aberdeen street; James Dafoe, Belmont; John Lynn, 62 Sophia street.

Peterboro Soldier Writes Home

Refugees Were Glad to Get Back to Their Homes.

The following letter was received by Mrs. Hartley, 144 Hunter street, from her son, Pte. Stanley Hartley:

Dear Mother,—I am glad that the opportunity to answer your ever welcome letter has come. The people of France and Belgium are happy people now. Some of the villages that we captured from the Huns before the armistice was signed were not so badly wrecked and as he went back he left some civilians too old to be of any use to him. They tell us some pretty sad stories about the Huns when they were here. As you know the war was fought in and about the same towns and battle lines for four years so that the towns that we are now in are all in pretty good condition. Some of the people have suffered more than any-troops that they kissed them. These peopel have suffered mor than anybody knows. There are a good many homeless but things will soon be alright, although it will take time to get everything in ship shape order. I think that we will have a chance to get back to Canada before many months, but it will take a long time to settle peace terms and get all of the troops back to Canada.

From your loving son,
STANLEY.

A JUST AND LASTING PEACE

League of Nations Will be a Par of the Treaty Itself.

By Robert J. Bender.

(Copyright, 1918 by the United Press.)

BREST, Dec. 14.—President Wilson has arrived in France to exert his whole efforts for "a just and lasting peace." The fundamental contention of the American delegates is that the league of nations must be a part of the treaty itself, in order to protect the square deal which the treaty settlements seek to obtain for all the peoples involved. Without the support which such a league would give to the peace delegation, the President is understood to feel that American participation in the negotiations is hardly worth while.

Thought She Bought Farm and Not Acre

Stamping Ground, Ky., Dec 17.—Joseph Smith, a Scott county farmer, lost $5,888 a one stroke of an auctioneer's hammer, and Miss Ramsey, a plainly dressed stranger was bitterly disappointed when she failed to purchase a fine 265 acre bluegrass farm for $163.

Smith's farm was being sold at auction, and the auctioneer, following his usual custom, was calling for bids by the acre, instead of for the farm as a whole. Miss Ramsey was one of the most energetic bidders, often overbidding herself in her eagerness.

Finally, in response to another insistent call from the master of ceremonies, Miss Ramsay called out:—"Well, I'll give $163, but that's all I can pay."

The bid was accepted with the announcement:—

"Sold to Miss Ramsay for $163."

Then Miss Ramsay opened an old fashioned reticule, carefully counted out $163 in bills, and handed them over to the auctioneer.

"I'll pay in full right now!" she declared.

She was absolutely dumbfounded when informed that the farm would cost her $41,728, $163 for each of its 256 acres.

Then the farm was sold all over again and a syndicate of Stapping Ground men bough it, but paid only $35,840, just $5 888 less than the price it which it was knocked down to Miss Ramsay.

Annual Meeting Art Association of Peterboro

Officers Elected for the Year—Annual Report.

The annual meeting of the Peterborough branch of the Women's Art Association was held on Thursday evening. The President, Mrs. V. Eastwood, was in the chair. The Secretary's report for the year 1917-18 was read and adopted.

The election of officers then took place, which resulted as follows:

2nd Vice-President—Mrs. Aylmer.
Cor. Secretary—Mrs. A. E. Sherwood.
Associate Secretary — Miss Flora Collins.
Rec. Secretary—Miss Bennet.
Treasurer—Miss Hatton.
Archivist—Miss M. Rush.
Hon. members' representatives — Mrs. Morris, Mrs. Neill, and Mrs. A. Stevenson.
Convenors of Committees: Lecture — Mrs. F. C. Neal, Miss Morrow. Exhibition—Miss Hatton. Social — Mrs. Aylmer, Mrs. McDermid. Musical — Mrs. Gliddon. Public School Medals—Mrs. Rush.

Annual Report.

The 13th annual report of the association:

Once again the time has come for the annual meeting, the time when the Secretary is expected to make her yearly report. As the black cloud of war still shadowed the world, the members of the Peterborough Branch of the Women's Art Association have, during the past year, refrained from trying to carry on their activities of the days before the war in order that their efforts might be concentrated on Red Cross work. The report this year is necessarily very brief. As has been the custom for many years, the association offered medals to be competed for by the pupils of the Public Schools. The drawings of the children were very creditable, and the members of the association feel that the interest aroused in the children by this competietion—even though it were the sole work accomplished by the association—is sufficient justification for the existence of the local branch of the Women's Art Association during the exacting and trying years of the war.

Members of the association acted as judges at the local Industrial Fair.

The Treasurer reports a balance on hand of $8.37.

THE HONEYMOON, LTD.

A Bright Snappy, Musical Comedy.

Musical comedy, one of the most popular forms of entertainment known to the present generation of theatre goers will be the attraction at the Grand Opera House Thursday night, Dec. 19, when Chas. F. Yale offers "The Honeymoon Limited." Funny comedians, real singers and a chorus of beautiful and shapely girls are the characteristic features of musical comedy. It is for these reasons that musical shows hold such a firm grip and unwaning popularity with those who relish a light entertainment. A company of 35 comedians, singers, dancers and musicians form the 1919 version of "The Honeymoon Limited." A scenic production embracing two acts and half a dozen scenes are shown during the action of the play. "A Trip to Palm Beach" is the introductory scene of the first act and at the finale of the second act spectators find the scene laid on the Metropolitan roof garden in New York City.

Late and popular songs sung by principals and a chorus of blonde, brunette and Titian haired beauties is one of the features of "The Honeymoon Limited." During the action of the piece over a score of tuneful melodies are introduced. Among them are, "Going Up," "There's a Garden in Old Italy," "Love's Own Kiss," "I'm Through With Roaming Roncos," "The Last Long Mile," "Follow the Girl Around," "Wait 'Till the Cows Come Home," "Love, Here is My Heart," "Leave it to Jane," "If You Look in Her Eyes," and other haunting melodies that linger in the memory.

ORCHIDS GROWN IN PETERBOROUGH

Copping, at the head of Aylmer street. The most striking of ya Labiata, which is one of the showya Labiata, which is one of the showiest of the commercial varieties of Orchid. They will be left in Jordan's window for a few days only, as they require the congenial atmosphere of the warm conservatory, and a store window subjects them to too many sudden changes of temperature.

Keep the Bowels Regular and You Won't Be Sick

If the bowels do not move regularly they will sooner or later become constipated, and constipation is productive of more ill-health than almost any other trouble.

The sole cause of constipation is an inactive liver, and unless the liver is kept active, you may be sure that headaches, piles, heartburn, biliousness, jaundice, floating specks before the eyes, and many other troubles will follow the wrong action of this, one of the most important organs of the body.

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills will regulate the bowels so that you will have a free and easy motion every day, and one pill a night for thirty days will cure the worst cases of constipation.

They do this by acting directly on the liver and making the bile pass through the bowels instead of allowing it to get into the blood, thus causing many stomach and bowel troubles.

Mrs. Jos. Labrec, Louise Apts., Calgary, Alta., writes:—"I have been troubled with constipation for the last two years. I have tried numerous treatments, but have never been relieved by anything until I used Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills which are helping me wonderfully."

We do not claim that Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills are a "cure-all," but we do claim that there is nothing better for a sluggish liver.

Price 25 cents a vial at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

O.H.A. Executive Committee Held Meeting Last Evening

Number of New Clubs Admitted Into the Association—Sub-Committee Appointed.

Special to the Examiner:

TORONTO, Dec. 14.—The chief interest in the initial meeting of the new executive committee of the O. H. A., held last night, lay in the disposition of the problems arising out of the disbandment of the Ashalanta Hockey Club, which was last week refused admission to the O.H.A. on the grounds that the club represented a commercial institution.

The executive felt that it was not in the best interests of amateur hockey that a number of players should be disposed of as a unit by any organization to any club in the association membership. In pursuance of this policy, it was decided that certificates would not be issued to more than three players from any one club from the list that had been furnished by the Ashatlanta Club.

New Clubs Admitted.

New clubs were admitted as follows: Junior Series—Toronto Canoe Club, Parkdale Canoe Club, Bradford, Sudbury, Cobourg, Waverleys, Sarnia, Brampton, Libertys, Stayner, Belleville Ontarios, Cornwall, London.

Intermediate—St. Thomas, Whitby Military Hospital, Guelph, Guelph Ontario Agricultural College, Milverton, Cobourg, Waverleys, Simcoe, Cornwall, Toronto Beaches, Huntsville, London.

The acceptance of the Belleville Ontarios is subject to the approval of the existing Belleville Club and those from Sarnia to the settlement of an account held against last year's Sarnia Club by Kitchener.

The suspensions of Earl K. Kamieson of Kitchener, David Pugsley of Hawkstone, and D. G. Fox, formerly of Cobourg, were removed.

The cases of Arthur Bulger, Clarence Russell and Roy Johns, other Cobourg players, were deferred until their personal applications are sent in. This year's sub-committee was appointed as follows: Sheriff Paxton, W. A. Hewitt, Francis Nelson (chairman).

At last night's meeting President R. M. Glover occupied the chair.

WHISKEY IN A TEA CHEST

Peterboro' Co-operative Store Manager Arrested

Maurice Crowley, manager of the Peterborough Co-operative Society's store at 200 Rubidge Street, was arrested yesterday noon on the charge of having liquor in a public place. Two tin-lined tea chests held four cases of Gooderham and Worts' Canadian whiskey, together with a bottle of prim gin and one of brandy. To keep the wet goods from "juggling" hay was packed around the whiskey boxes.

On the table directly in front of the Magistrate's desk was placed the whiskey, wrapped carefully with tissue paper, while the prisoner quietly ignored the tell-tale booze set in front of him and pleaded not guilty.

Mr. V. J. McElderry was retained as counsel for the defence, and the case was resumed this morning, and was still proceedings at the time of going to press.

Detective Newhall was suspicious of the contents of the tea chests when he saw them moved into the Co-operative premises. Whereas an ordinary chest of tea weighs only 60 lbs., one of these chests weighed over three times that amount.

Edwin McKay, a local barber, was fined $210.10 for selling whiskey which was purchased by another man on the street.

"The way of transgressor's is hard," said the Magistrate, shaking his head.

"Scene From "The Very Idea," at The Grand Next Wednesday.

That it is possible for a ticklish subject to be treated humorously gave title to "The Very Idea!" the Astor Theatre, New York, screamingly funny farce which will be presented here at The Grand on Wednesday evening next, Dec. 18.

Contrary to precedent, this farce does not expend all its humour in the second act, but carries its riot of fun to the fall of the final curtain. In fact, the synopsis might be programmed Act 1—Chuckle; Act 2—Laugh; Act 3—Roar; for at the final curtain there are three lines of dialogue put over the footlights that send the audience from the theatre with a broad grin. The theme of the play is delicately handled by both author and the presenting cast, and care has been taken to avoid lines and situations that might offend the most squeamish. If you are looking for an evening of solid fun and enjoyment "The Very Idea" is a safe investment.

The same company and production as played the Royal Alexandra Theatre, Toronto, the week before last, will be seen here.

The O.H.A. Groups Are Arranged for Season

COMEDY AND TRAGEDY REPRESENTED IN A GEORGE STREET WINDOW

Two of the most striking art advertisements displayed in a Peterborough window for some time are on view at present in the Denne Flour and Feed Store windows, and were accomplished by the J. J. Turner & Sons' firm. In the north window the "Quaker Oats" tragedy is represented by a really marvellous moving picture of the Quaker Oats fire. In the fore-ground are the ruins reproduced exactly as two years ago to-day, while through the ruins such realistic representations of smoke and flame leap constantly, the effect is most startling. The effect is as near as possible to the original as could possibly be produced.

Comedy.

In the south "Exhibition Grounds" window comedy is represented by a novelty advertisement. An old gentleman with poised broom awaits the advent of a mouse, which appears and re-appears at intervals, while the old man makes fruitless attempts to hit it. Above the novelty is the Peterborough Exhibition Grounds motto, "Make it What it Should Be." It is interesting to note the effect two windows have on the hundreds of people who are speedily attracted, while looking at the north window tragedy is plainly marked on every feature. A glance at the south window quickly brightens every countenance, and the spectator in nine cases out of ten hastens to bring a friend to see the novelty windows.

U. S. Agent Arrested as Swindler; Tries to Swallow Cheque

C. DE F. MOLYNEAUX, INTERNAL REVENUE INSPECTOR, TRAPPED THROUGH AID OF WEALTHY WOMAN.

NEW YORK, December 12.—Prevented from swallowing an incriminating cheque after he had been arrested on a charge of attempted swindling, Charles de F. Molyneaux, Internal Revenue Inspector, was arraigned before United States Commissioner Hitchcock, and in default of $3,000 bail, was committed to the Tombs.

He was arrested last Monday after he fell into a trap laid by internal revenue agents under William H. Edwards, Collector for the Second New York district, in which a dictaphone was used to gather evidence.

Molyneaux called on Mrs. Delia L. Martin, wealthy widow, of No. 667 Madison aevnue some time last week according to Mr. Edwards. Mrs. Martin reported to him that the inspector wanted to collect $4,600, which he said his investigations showed she owed for the years 1914, 1915 and 1916. His commission for such a collection would be $1400, he confided to her, and if she would pay him that amount he would see to it that she would not have to pay the balance of $2,600.

Mrs. Martin put up immediate acceptance of the bargain and consulted Collector Edwards, with her son, John L. Martin, real estate operator. The men prevailed upon her to carry out the scheme.

A dictaphone was installed in the Martin apartment and when Molyneaux called again on Sunday, and repeated his proposal a government stenographer took down every word. Mrs. Martin had been coached in asking certain questions. She agreed to his proposel but insisted that she should pay him by cheque on Monday. To this he demurred for a time, but finally consented.

After he had received the cheque the next day he was arrested in the street by revenue agents. While going up the stairs of an elevated station he quietly took a crumpled bit of paper out of his pocket and then crammed it into his mouth. A revenue officer seized him by the throat and forced him to emit what proved to be the cheque.

Molyneux had been a government employee for six years. He is married and has two children. An investigation is being made of his reported stock speculations, Mr. Edwards announced.

LLOYD GEORGE IS CONCEDED A SAFE MAJORITY TO-DAY

Asquith "Dosn't Mind the Candid Remarks That Are Made About Him."

(Canadian Press.)

LONDON, December 14. — Balloting for the election of parliament is in progress throughout Great Britain to-day. The indications are that Premier George will control a safe majority. The Daily Express estimates that his government will win 435 seats, Unionists 310, and Liberals 125; while the Opposition parties, including Labour, will secure 272, giving Prime Minister a majority of 163. The women have been active in electioneering. There is intense rivalry between Mrs. Lloyd George and Mrs. McKenna, wife of the former Chancellor of the Exchequer, who is a staunch supporter of former Premier Asquith.

Miss Elizabeth Asquith admitted in some of her speeches that the electors sometimes made candid remarks about her father, but she alleged "he does not mind." Bonar Law's daughter at Glasgow also took part in the campaign.

BRITISH OFFICER PAYS HIGH TRIBUTE

NEW YORK, Dec. 14. —Commander Lionel Wells, senior naval officer of the British Admiralty at this port, gave out a statement in which he thanked the American press for the loyal observance of the censorship regulations in regard to shipping.

"You will have recognized the reason for the censorship," he said, "especially of ship movements, which you have so loyally observed, and so voluntarily. I had to be reticent in the past. I arrived here in March, 1917, and organized a chain of offices for the instruction and guidance of merchant shipping against the submarine warfare. Although this system, maintained for awhile, was very helpful, it was subsequently decided to experiment with the convoy method advocated for some months previously.

"In May, 1917, the convoy scheme for merchant transports was given a practical test for the first time and the success of this venture led to its general adoption and extension. Submarines at that time were being armed with better guns and were vastly improved for seakeeping and the losses of ships sailing independently were more serious.

Cruisers and Destroyers.

"The convoy system demanded the use of cruisers for the ocean voyage and a system of destroyer escorts in the dangerous waters off the United Kingdom and French coast. These escorts, of which a considerable number have been United States' ships, have done, successfully, most useful work, and it has been a very great pleasure to work with the admirals in command of their squadrons and the officers of the ships themselves.

"Too little prominence has been given for reasons stated above, to the excellent work of these ships, but the effect of their work cannot be overestimated, and will no doubt receive generous recognition when the time comes and the facts are published.

"The captains of the merchant ships quickly grasped the convoy instructions and the necessity for their organization, and here again, having braved the war risks singly, they were quite alive to the advantage of sailing in convoy—several, of course, had experienced the loss of their ships by submarine attack.

Heroic Work by Merchant Marine.

"It is difficult to overestimate the heroic work of the mercantile marine, or to suitably recognize the debt of the nations arrayed against the enemy to them. Without them and their courageous endurance war could not have gone on—the navies of the mercantile marine are complementary in any idea of the bridge across the Atlantic.

"New York has undoubtedly been the greatest convoy port of the world, for although a good deal of prominence has naturally been given to the troop transportation, all the time the goods have been slipping across to the tune of about fifty ships a week to supply the needful food ammunition and stores. These convoys contained ships of all nationalities, including neutral ships for allied ports, and it is immensely to the credit of the officers in charge of escorts, and those specially detailed to sail in the guiding ships that such a high degree of efficiency was arrived at. The co-operation of all concerned in this great task—naval and mercantile—has been ideal."

Orgy of Platinum Buying Follows End of Government

Jewelry Stores Respond With Greatest Display of Rare Metal Designs in History.

CHICAGO, Ill., Dec. 14.—Jewelers here report a regular orgy of platinum jewelry buying as a result of the lifting of the government ban on platinum. During the war the government ban applied only to the use of platinum in the manufacture of jewelry and did not apply to platinum jewelry already made up and in the hands of retailers. But the critical need of the government for platinum for the manufacture of munitions created a nation wide sentiment that it was unpatriotic to wear or buy such jewelry.

The end of the war lifted not only the actual ban, but the sentimental one, and now those who care for platinum jewelry can buy it without hurting their consciences. As a result those who consider platinum jewelry the highest form of beauty in jewelry are crowding the shops and making up for lost time. Connoisseurs declare platinum the most effective setting for diamonds, and it is one of the most expensive jewelry forms.

Luckily for the jewelers the ban was lifted in time for the Christmas shopping season. Platinum again occupies the position of honour in the jewelry shops and the jeweler's windows are ablaze with platinum rings, bracelets, necklaces and other ornaments, mostly set with diamonds. Some of the windows contain platinum to the exclusion of all other jewelry. It is a sort of jubilee exhibition on the part of the jewelers, and never before in its history has the city seen such bewildering display of platinum jewelry.

The fact that platinum is quoted at $105 an ounce, six times the price of gold, will give an idea of what the restoration of the metal to the jewelers' lists will mean in the sum total of Christmas trade.

RESTORE THE NATURAL SIGHT

OPENING CHAUTAUQUA ATTRACTION

The first attraction of the Winter Chautauqua, "The Pilgrim Girls", was greeted by a splendid audience at the Grand Opera House last night. The high class music including cello solos violin solos and choruses was thoroughly appreciated by all who attended. The Woman's Council has been highly congratulated upon their very successful venture in bringing such a course of attractions to the city as the balance of the entertainments promise to be judging by the first offering.

The Pilgrims Girls comprised six clever versatile musicians who entertain in drawing room style and produce from among their number two cornelists—a soprano, solist ,a cellist a violinist, a drummer, a pianist, and a reader—and these individually and collectivey, present a program which, for variety and entertaining talent, ranks as classical and exclusive.

A feature of the programme was an interpretation of Columbus' journey to America. The storm at sea, the wind whistling through the sails, the uproar of mutiny and the booming of the guns when land was sighted, were readily discerned on the musical picture given by the Pilgrim Girls.

So perfec was each number to distinguish between them would be a difficult task but from a point of novelty an Irish piano-logue might be specially mentioned. This was a unique sory seductively told to piano, accompaniment and soprano solos and character impersonations by the youngest member of the company (a Canadian girl) were distinctively clever.

Edith Cavell's Grave Believed Located in Brussels Cemetery

British Hold Impressive Ceremony—King George and Queen Mary Send Wreath.

LONDON, Dec. 16.— (British Wireless Service.) — The grave of Edith Cavell, the English nurse executed by the Germans, in the National Cemetery at Brussels is believed to have been definitely located from a German plan of the cemetery in the hands of the Belgian authorities, and on Tuesday last the British community held a commemoration service at the grave. The service was attended by the British Minister, who laid on the mound of earth a wreath from King George and Queen Mary inscribed, "In memory of a brave and splendid English woman."

Sir F. S. Villiers deposited a wreath bound with the British colours in the name of the British Legation and colony, and Brand Whitlock, the American Minister, added a tribute of his own. The Spanish Minister, the Belgian Foreign Minister and the members of the legations' staffs were present at the ceremony.

One of the first acts of King Albert after his re-entry into Brussels was to go to the cemetery in company with Queen Elizabeth, who laid a wreath on Miss Cavell's grave.

GOT RID OF BRONCHITIS.

"I am pleased to say that Dr. Chase's Mr. W. H. Walker, Calmar, Alta., writes: Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has done much good to myself, wife and children. My eldest girl, seven years old, had bronchitis and the doctor who attended her did not seem to do much good. We got Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine for her and she soon got well. We always keep this medicine in the house now ready for use and find that it soon cures coughs and colds."

GERMAN BUSINESS MANS OUTLOOK

(By H. B. C. Pollard.)

When Germany launched her armies against her neighbours in 1914, she looked to a short and successful campaign; the plunder from it was to pay all expenses and leave a magnificent profit.

This attitude of mind—the idea that warfare was good business and would yield a fine return—was that of the whole German people, rather than any idealisation of militarism such as may be found in the writings of Bernhardi. The average German, as the world knew him, was a commercial man rather than a soldier, and the German nation embarked upon this war as a purely business speculation.

Business Enterprise.

As a business enterprise the Germans had lost the war within a year, but the national disinclination to look the facts in the face played straight into the hands of the military party. The latter, true to the Prussian tradition, are dogged enough to complete the ruin of the people and the country rather than admit their failure, and thus injure the prestige and privilege of their caste.

In the realm of politics, the interests of the aristocracy, landowners, and officer caste are dominant, but the national wealth of the German Empire is determined by the German export trade, and the work of her industrious merchants, manufacturers and work people. It is these folk who have had, and still more in the future will have, to pay the penalty for the criminal folly of their rulers, and the war has now reached such a stage that whatever happens Germany can never win back, even under the most advantageous terms of peace, a hundredth part of what she has now lost.

Complicated Fabric.

The whole complicated fabric of German commerce rested upon State finance and State credit, which supported the private companies and traders. To-day, no German firm of which the capital is in Germany knows whether it is solvent or not. The German War Loan Stock is, perhaps, the most dubious Government security that has ever been placed on the market; and the general state of German governmental credit is reflected by the extraordinary fall in value of the mark. Before the war, a German mark was as good outside Germany as an English shilling; today, it has dropped to nearly half that value.

As to the future of private firms in Germany, no outlook could be darker, the cautious business man who renews dealing in Germany after peace has been declared, will only be safe on the basis of cash down before delivery. The whole condition of private credit in Germany is undermined. Wages have risen tremendously, stocks of raw material have completely vanished; machinery, plant, buildings, and transport facilities have depreciated to an unheard of extent; while the labour problem, (owing to the gigantic rise in the price of food stuffs, and the universal shortage of money,) will be acute, even if social revolution is for a while postponed.

"Vast Stocks."

From time to time German propagandists have alluded to the vast stocks of manufactured goods held ready in Germany for "dumping" abroad after the war. In view of the shortages that Germany has been forced to endure for the last three years, it is extremely doubtful if any of these reputed stocks exist. So far as metal goods are concerned there can be none at all. The same applies to all food stuffs, woollen and leather goods, although probably a few specialized trades, such as the drug and dye industries, china, glass, and earthenware products are unaffected. Here again, however, one must take into consideration not only the shortage of labour for anything, except war work, but also the dearth of fuel, replacements to machinery, essential factors like the lack of belting and lubricating oil, and the vastly increased cost of production.

Tonnage Problem.

After the war, the tonnage problem will present many difficulties, and there is no reason to suppose that freight rates for German goods will be abnormally low. For four years the German has been kept off the market, yet the world has not suffered any lack of essentials. With the coming of peace, the German is faced with an entirely new set of conditions, and without the hindrance of an "economic war after the war" or any hostile counter poise of tariffs, be will find the old conditions swept away, and the balance of competition, which was in his favour before the war, now heavily loaded against him.

The German manufacturer knows what to expect. He knows, furthermore, that every extra month added to the duration of the war, and every ton of shipping sunk, adds to his accumulated disabilities. Business men in neutral countries, who are in touch with German Commercial circles, know the bitter state of mind of the German commercial classes—employers, middle-men and labouring classes alike. These claim that the war mania of Germany's rulers has destroyed their nation's trade for fifty years, has rendered inevitable the revolt of labour, and has ruined the classes who were the real economic backbone of the German nation. They have but slender hopes for the future, and for the past nothing but regret.

One thing, however, emerges for the good of all the world, as well as for that of the German nation: whatever the soldiers, the Pan-Germans, and the Court may say, every middle and lower-class German has now learnt that most important lesson—War does not pay.

TELLS THE FULL STORY OF ARMISTICE RUMOUR

Roy W. Howard, President of United Press Association, Interviewed on Return—Newspaper Men on Way Home Ran Into Big Doings at the Port of Brest.

GIVEN AS OFFICIAL

Editor and Publisher of New York, a leading newspaper trade paper, in its current issue, prints an interview with Roy W. Howard, president of the United Press Association, respecting the origin of the armistice report on November 7th. The Star has already published a statement by Mr. Howard in which he called attention to some as yet unexplained features of the incident, and in the Editor and Publisher interview he describes in detail his part in forwarding the message.

All America celebrated that day, for the United Press serves some 400 leading newspapers all over the continent. Readers will recall that although the armistice message was sent out which Mr. Howard explains in unqualified terms, the Star did not issue an extra. So far as known, the Star, with a single exception, was the only one of the 400 newspapers receiving the service to practice this conservatism.

The interview in Editor and Publisher, follows:

Roy W. Howard, president of the United Press, who sent the message from Brest on Nov. 7th, stating that the armistice had been signed by the Germans, which caused a wave of enthusiasm all over the United States, but which was later proved to be at least premature, returned to this country last Monday night on an army transport.

At the instance of Editor and Publisher, Mr. Howard told in detail how and under what circumstances he received and accepted what he had reason to believe was authentic information, and how he despatched the message to his New York office:

Birth of the Armistice Rumor.

"I arrived in Brest on the morning of November 7, expecting to start for home on a transport," said Mr. Howard. "I called upon Gen. Harries, in command of the military base, shortly after 10 a.m., and it was at army headquarters that I first heard that an armistice had been signed. This was only a rumor, however, which could not be confirmed, though I found that the French military authorities and the local newspaper, La Depeche, also had heard the report.

"It was later in the day, about four o'clock—when Major Fred C. Cook, formerly news editor of the Washington, D. C., Star, and I called upon Admiral H. B. Wilson. Just as I was introduced to the admiral, one of his aides, Ensign Sellards, came in.

"'Did you give it to him?' the admiral asked Ensign Sellards.

"'No,' replied the ensign, 'Mr. Coudurie was not in.'

"Mr. Coudarie, by the way, is the publisher of La Depeche.

"'Well,' responded the admiral, 'did you leave it?'

"Ensign Sellards said he did not, and the admiral then told him to take it back, leave it with anybody who was in charge and tell them to announce it.

"All this time I was wondering what 'it' was.

"As the ensign was about to leave the room the admiral turned to Major Cook and said:

"'It's all over. The armistice was signed to-day at eleven o'clock. The American troops have taken Sedan, too.'

"'Is that official?' asked the Major.

"'Yes,' replied the admiral. 'The war is over—it is finished.'

"I then asked the admiral if he was making the news public, and he said that he was, and that he was sending his respatch to La Depeche. I twice repeated Major Cook's enquiry as to whether the news was official, and being fully reassured, knowing the extreme conservatism of all army and navy officials in such matters, asked the admiral if I might use the despatch.

"'Certainly. Go ahead,' replied the admiral.

"I suggested to the admiral that I would probably encounter some linguistic difficulties, and asked if Ensign Sellards might accompany me to get my cable off. To this he readily assented and after I had typed a verbatim copy of the admiral's despatch the message was filed at the cable office by a messenger from La Depeche.

Brest the First to Celebrate.

"In the meantime the U. S. Marine Band was giving its regular afternoon concert on the plaza in front of the admiral's office. Admiral Wilson called an orderly, gave him a copy of his despatch and told him to give it to the bandmaster, and tell him to put some life into his music. The bandmaster glanced at the message and had it read to the crowd by a musician who spoke French. From your knowledge of what occurred here you can imagine what occurred there among the excitable French people. As I went to the office of La Depeche the streets were thronged with excited French men and women, hugging and kissing every American soldier or sailor they could reach.

"When I filed my bulletin I had little idea that it would reach New York ahead of the filings from Paris. I knew that the story would break in Paris first and I knew our men were set for it. My only thought was to 'back up the play.'

"Later, I filed a very brief story on the street scenes in Brest.

"While I was at dinner that evening with some army officers another officer came to our table and said that the French army people were saying the armistice announcement was not officially confirmed. I went immediately to Admiral Wilson's office, but it was closed, so I went to army headquarters and there learned that while the report was believed to be true, the army had received no official word.

"I then located Admiral Wilson, finding him at dinner with the French admiral in command at Brest. I found that he had received later word that the despatch was not official. He was not disturbed, however, still believing the news was true.

"I imemdiately sent another despatch stating that Admiral Wilson's message was not official and was not confirmed.

Vagaries of Censorship.

"While I was annoyed I was not particularly worried. The French censorship has been air-tight all during the armistice. It has frequently been impossible to get out official developments. Matters that had not been officially announced were absolutely unsendable. I was not worried because I felt sure that unless Admiral Wilson's information was official my despatch had died on the Brest censor table. I merely filed the correction as a matter of safety.

"The next morning I learned that Admiral Wilson's bulletin was not official, and that the delegation which finally signed the armistice as accepted had not yet reached the allied lines. For the first time in my life I thought that I could detect a virtue in a censorship. I was reasoning that after all it was a good thing to have a check on just such information as had been foisted off on Admiral Wilson and myself when a delayed cable from New York was handed to me asking for more details, as Washington had announced that our bulletin was premature.

"The only time that a censorship might have functioned to the advantage of a newspaper man—it had not.

"I immediately called on Admiral Wilson and laid my cards on the table, explaining that about the only tangible asset of a press association is its reputation for accuracy and its dependability. I appreciated that he had acted in good faith but explained the necessity of my making a complete statement to our clients of what had happened. The signed statement by the admiral, which the United Press carried, was the result. I would like to say incidentally that in making the statement the admiral was fully conscious of the seriousness of his own position, yet never for a moment sought to cover himself at our expense.

"I did not know at that time that my bulletin correcting the first statement had been held up by the American censor for many hours, resulting in the United Press standing on its first bulletin for hours after the correction had been received by the American censor in New York because the correction was not delivered to us.

"I did not know, however, that the first bulletin had cleared the French censor even though not official. I sought the reason for this from the head of the French Bureau at Brest, Capt. Gambey. From him learned that the news of the armistice had reached the cable and censorship office sufficiently ahead of my bulletin to allow the celebration to get under way there. In the excitement my urgent message was shot through to New York, and more than two hours later the operator bethought himself and sent the message to the censor!

"By that time—well, I have been told that there was quite some party under way!"

THE WIFE

BY JANE PHELPS

Ruth Hopes Kenyon Roberts Will Influence Brian for His Good.

CHAPTER LXIII.

Ruth laughed at Brian. The idea that he should imagine Rachel would want to go back, when she had grieved for her, Ruth ever since she was married.

"Just wait, Brian Hackett, until Rachel cooks chicken and corn fritters for you, and until you eat some of her hot corn bread for breakfast! You'll be as glad to have her—almost— as I will. Of course you won't love her as I do."

"I should say not! Why should I love a big, fat darky when I have you to love?"

Kenyon Roberts and his wife had become very friendly with Ruth and Brian. In many ways it was good for them all, but especially for Brian. Mr. Roberts was very ambitious. He had determined to win success, if hard work would do it. So he told Brian. He was always out very early in the morning and seldom left his office until after six.

"When I don't have any business to attend to, I read up on law. I find a lot of Blackstone of which I am ignorant. And nowadays it is more necessary than ever to keep one's wits sharpened, at least it seems that way to me."

Ruth was delighted when he talked that way to Brian. Much as she loved him, she knew his faults, and indolence was one of them. If his pride could be awakened he might overcome it. She did all she could, said all she dared to say—he was so sensitive to criticism— so she hoped their friendship with the Roberts would help her in making Brian see the necessity for exercising his powers if he could succeed.

"What's going to be, will be," was one of his favourite quotations, or "If luck is coming my way it will come anway," was another. Yet Brian was naturally cleverer, possessed a keener, more analytical mind than did Kenyon Roberts. Application was all he needed.

Mrs. Roberts and Ruth found many things in which they were interested in common. Often they spent Saturday afternoon together at the museum or in some shops that carried goods interesting to them both; old tapestries, jades, etc. Ruth never worked on Saturday afternoons. Not at any time of year. When away, she usually suited herself, but Mr. Mandel had told her from the first that she need not return to the shop on Saturday. That after her luncheon she was free. So, often, Clara Roberts would meet her, they would lunch together, then spend the afternoon at a matinee, or, as I have said, in visiting places which entertained them.

Ruth had not seen Mollie King since the night she had her and Claude Beckly to dinner. Brian had been home early, they had been very happy. Rachel had arrived, and Brian was ready to agree that she could "cook all around Crawford."

Ruth had not been required to go out of town for some time. She was glad that it was so, as Brian was not apt to say so much about her work. In fact, for days at a time, neither of them mentioned it or her salary.

Mr. Mandel watched Ruth closely. He saw her happier, and was puzzled.

"I wonder if that fellow is waking up and treating her as he should?" he said to himself, vaguely hoping that he wasn't. "Pretty late in the day," he added.

They had been very busy at the shop. Large and important orders kept them all working very hard, each at his or her allotted task. But Arthur Mandel never was too busy to watch Ruth Hackett, covertly, of course.

One day he asked her to remain a moment, as she passed him on her way out.

"You look tired," he said placing a chair for her.

"I am, a little."

"You have done splendid work lately. Splendid! Your salary will be fifty dollars a week hereafter."

"Oh, thank you!" it was so nice to have her salary raised without asking for it. "There were not many employers like Mr. Mandel," Ruth thought as she thanked him.

"You have earned it."

Ruth knew she was worth fifty dollars a week, yet she could not but feel grateful because Arthur Mandel also had realized her worth. It was so nice to be appreciated.

As she walked slowly home, she recalled how Brian sulked when she was raised before. Would he do so again? Had she better tell him? She decided that it was best to tell him at once. She knew his jealous nature and if she didn't tell him—hoping to save his feelings — and he found it out, he might feel she had something to hide; some reason for not wanting him to know. He would never dream that it was to save his feelings; to keep him from feeling that she earned more than he did. That never would occur to him as a reason for not telling him of her raise.

To-morrow—Ruth is Much Happier Now That Rachel Is With Her.

Stomach So Bad

THOUGHT HE WOULD DIE. CAN EAT ANYTHING NOW.

But for indigestion and dyspepsia, many a life might be a pleasant one.

The misery which stomach troubles cause the sufferer knows only too well and any one who has suffered knows what joy it would give to be able to eat three good meals a day and not be punished for it after.

Nearly everything that enters a weak stomach acts as an irritant, and even the little that is eaten causes such torture and is digested so imperfectly that it does little good.

Before you can eat heartily, and not pick and choose your food, you must put your stomach right so that it will manufacture its own digestive ferments.

For forty years now Burdock Blood Bitters has been making weak stomachs strong, and permanently curing severe cases of indigestion and dyspepsia that other remedies were powerless to reach.

Mr. H. L. Fairweather, Cumberland Bay, N. B., writes:—"I was troubled with my stomach for two years, and sometimes was so bad I thought I would die. I tried everything I ever heard tell of, and had medicine from three doctors, but continued to grow worse. One day I read of some wonderful cures made with Burdock Blood Bitters. After taking two bottles I could eat any kind of food without any bad effects and by the time I had taken four I was in perfet health."

PROPHETS AND THE WAR

REMARKABLE UTTERANCES OF MEN NOW DEAD.

There Were Germans a Quarter of a Century Ago Who Knew That the British Could Not Be Conquered, and That Anglo-Saxon World Would Re-unite to Fight Common Danger.

O^F all folk who have been made to look foolish during the course of the war none have appeared in worse light than many of the professional politicians, literary men, and service people. Men with names known all over the world have made themselves a butt and laughing-stock amongst tens of thousands by their ridiculous failure to prophecy as to what would happen, and how the various phases of the great struggle would go.

Many may recall the noted editor of a big Sunday newspaper who declared that the Germans would be found sadly wanting in big artillery; the celebrated scientific-novelist who declared that Britain would be beaten to a frazzle in the air; the renowned military critic, writing in one of the most powerful journals, who was sure "Russia would be in Berlin before the first Christmas of the struggle!" There are dozens of others besides — a second famous novelist, of peaceful intent, whose prophecies have been simply laughable; a military critic in a famous paper who was finally asked to cease his prophesying, so absurb did his forecasts turn out; a professional crystal gazer in Paris, of world fame, who as a seer in the war has been about as far out as a Patagonian native could be!

Yet, curiously enough, amid all this medley and silliness of prophecy by men and women actually living to-day, who have the great advantage of seeing and knowing what is astir, it is strange to find that several celebrated modern folk who died years ago have left written and indubitable proof that they foresaw much more clearly, and immeasurably more truthfully, what would happen in the war than did any of the still living celebrated company who have been referred to above.

It is quite fifty years ago since the Right Hon. John Bright, that greatest of simple orators, made a speech in which the following magnificent passage occurred:—

"In the centuries to come we shall be proud that, from the loins of England, have sprung millions of prosperous and wealthy Americans. If we only act with discretion, we in these islands, we shall yet live to see, when we ourselves are in a great crisis, the two great commonwealths of Britain and the United States marching abreast, fighting the common foe, looked upon as the parents and guardians of the world's freedom and justice. We shall then rejoice that the Pilgrim Fathers are one with us again, and that we are a united family once more!"

Now what about that for a decent prophecy as to what would happen if ever Britain went to war and found herself in a tight place during a struggle for justice and right? And it was uttered some fifty years ago!

Then have you ever read the letters of that famous Oxford professor of Victorian days, the celebrated Max Muller? He was a German, mind you, who was proud of his own land, and devoted to his birthplace, as well as to England; and he was always wishful of promoting good fellowship and friendliness between the two countries. In a letter to Prince Christian (who died quite recently) written from Oxford in 1884, Max Muller says:—

"I know the feeling of Germany towards England. England has from time to time to pass through crises, and no one can deny that her statesmen and doctors do not always prescribe the right remedies. But the English nation is of good old stock, and woe to him who forgets this! England will never be conquered—not before the last Englishman, the last Scotsman, the last Irishman, the last Canadian and Newfoundlander, the last Sikh — aye, and the last Yankee, has fallen!"

There is a truly remarkable foresight indeed of the coming-in of all the Dominion-beyond-the-Seas to assist the Motherland when she needs it, though at the time Muller wrote this the British and Colonial relations were more strained than cordial. Moreover, note further how clearly he even sees the vision of a great and loyal India rushing to the rescue, too—a thing which has happened exactly as foretold, though Kaiser and junkers had both imagined so differently. Still grander is the vision which saw the United States hurrying up— to the last Yankee!—to fight with Britain when she needed their help.

Still more astounding are the prophecies in another letter by Muller, written in 1885 to the then German Minister at the Vatican, Herr von Schlotzer. Read this, and say what you think about it as a forevision of 1918?

"We are living to-day like the beasts of prey in pre-historic times. Every man in Europe is now a soldier. What are we to think of a Europe where no single state finds itself safe unless its cannons outnumber those of its neighbor? England is the only land which has not yet taken to arming all its sons. But drive England into a corner, and every man in it would to-morrow rush to be a soldier! There may be jealousies and disputes between Britain and her colonies; but if it comes to extremities any time the colonies will not allow a hair of England's head to be touched. Even India, which was once a big danger, would clearly show that England's enemies are her own.

"I wish they (the Germans) would send some other sensible man as Ambassador to London. The ambassadors we have here are clever diplomatists perhaps, but they cannot shake off the idea that diplomatists must play chess. Let us hope for better times. The present state of Europe is a disgrace to all, and history will condemn us and our times more strongly than it did the Huns and Vandals."

Truly remarkable indeed are those words, in 1885, of the Oxford professor who was himself a German.

Have you, too, ever read Lord Beaconsfield's "Tancred?" That curious novel of society and politics was written far back in the last century, yet in its latter part—called, note the coincidence, "The New Crusade"—Disraeli sees in a vision the coming days. "When British troops will capture Jerusalem and be hailed by its inhabitants as conquerors long looked for." He tells how Tancred rejoiced to find the British masters of Mesopotamia, Egypt, and Palestine—all this, mind you, long before we had any interest in the Suez Canal or Egypt—even before the canal was projected, let alone built! He tells how the desert was made to blossom as the rose, by the British who had beaten the Turks and driven them back into the East. Disraeli might have been actually watching Maude, Allenby, and their forces fighting today, so vividly and accurately does he portray what has actually occurred during the past year.

Now, therefore, let us not say that every prophecy of our own times is foolish and futile. But there is all the difference in the world between the foresight of men of real genius, and of the lower lights who too often fancy they possess that immortal spark of fire.

THE FLAMMENWERFER.

Commander of German Contingent Known as Prince of Hell.

The origin of the German flame throwers, or flammenwerfer, was described by the Reinisch-Westphalische Zeitung as follows:

The flammenwerfer troops owe their weapon to pure chance. Their present commander, Major R., a reserve officer, during military exercises in time of peace, received an order to defend a fort to the last extremeity. In the course of the operations, when all means had been exhausted, he finally called out the firemen, who happened to be under order at the time, and they, armed with fire hose, directed streams of water at the assailants. In the critical discussion following the exercises the Kaiser was present when Major R. declared that he might have sprinkled his assailants with burning petroleum quite as easily as with water. The Emperor asked whether that could be done, and received the reply that it was possible. It required long efforts, however, before Engineer L., who had been entrusted with this task, succeeded in discovering the combination of mineral oils hurled in flame jets by our engines against the enemy.

In peace times Major R. was chief of the firemen's corps in Leipzig. This Prince of Hell (Furat der Holle), as he is called by his men, enjoys great popularity, not only among his immediate subordinates, but throughout the army. He can now contemplate with pride the important development of the contingent placed under his orders. In January, 1915, he commanded a detachment of only 36 men; it is now a formation with special shock troops, armed with grenades and with everything necessary for independent operations.

Wood for Explosives.

South and East Africa wattlewood will probably be used in the near future as a factor for the manufacture of explosives. Until recently supplies of acetone, which is required in enormous quantities for the manufacture of propellent explosives, have been largely obtained from foreign countries, where cheap supplies of waste wood were available for destructive distillation for aceton production.

Since the outbreak of war this position has been radically altered, and acetone is now produced in England on a large scale by the distillation of wood. The question is also being taken up in other countries of the Empire—it is proposed, for instance, to erect a factory for this purpose in Natal, where wattlewood will be used as a raw material.

The possibility of similarly utilizing the wattlewood accumulated in connection with the wattlebark industry of the East Africa Protectorate is also under consideration, and at the Imperial Institute an exhaustive series of trial distillations with this wood, and also with olive wood from the same protectorate, used locally as fuel, has just been concluded. —Family Herald.

A Double Cross.

A young bank clerk named Cross, filling out his questionnaire, wrote, in answer to the query as to whether he had any children, "One expected." Instead of one, two arrived, both redheaded like the father. One was named Red Cross and the other Chris Cross.

Where Salmon Is No Luxury.

Owing to a surplus supply of fresh salmon, that so-called "luxury fish" sold at six cents a pound in Vancouver a short time ago, 7,000 pounds failing to find buyers even at that price.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Lachesis

By R. RAY BAKER

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Things happen just by accident, sometimes. But does the accident happen by accident? Not while Lachesis is holding down that destiny job on Mount Olympus.

Lachesis, you know, is one of the three Moerae who meddle in the affairs of mortals from the time they are born until they pass into other realms. Three Moerae, or Fates, have a room all to themselves in the big office building of the gods, and they run things with a high hand.

One would think that, in these days of progress, Clotho would get something to take the place of that old spinning wheel on which she spins the thread of life, and that Atropos could find an instrument less unwieldy than that long pair of dull shears she has been using to cut the thread when she decides it's long enough. However, they seem to have got along so far without modern improvements and they ought to know their business by this time.

Anyhow, this story concerns Lachesis, who works without instruments. She simply stands near the spinning wheel and dabs weal and woe on that thread and twists it about her fingers and ties knots in it, to suit her own pleasure. It has been said that Clotho and Lachesis and Atropos are old and ugly. Of course, as mortals reckon, these fates are old; but years don't count on Olympus. And as to ugliness—well, I'm willing to allow that Atropos has a hideous face, and it's possible Clotho is not beautiful, because her back must be lame and her eyes faded and her forehead wrinkled from bending over the spinning wheel; but Lachesis—there's no reason why she should be ugly, because her job furnishes lots of variety. Moreover, she's one of the heroines in this story, so she has just got to be beautiful.

The hero is Jack Watson, a mere mortal who defied Lachesis. She had decided, soon after Clotho began to spin the thread, that he should be married before he became twenty-eight years old, and she had picked for his bride a girl named Esther Richards. They were born in the same little town in Ohio and had one of those "school kid" romances; and then, when Jack was only eleven and Esther eight, it ended.

Jack moved with his parents to Columbus, where they resided three years. Jack and Esther wrote occasionally, as children sometimes carry on a correspondence, but they were too young to understand about affinities and such things, and gradually they forgot about each other.

When Jack was fifteen his mother died and he moved with his father to New York. The boy obtained a job as office boy with a broker and held it two years. Then he was promoted, and about that time pneumonia claimed Mr. Watson.

When Esther was ten she went with her parents to Vancouver, British Columbia, and there they remained until she was twenty-two.

Lachesis stood in the workroom of the Moerae one day, holding Jack Watson's thread of life in one hand and Esther Richards' in the other. "My, how far apart they have drifted," she murmured. "This will never do. I have decided differently."

Jack was leaning back in his swivel chair with his feet on his desk, in his own real estate office in Melbourne, Australia. Was he thinking about Esther? Decidedly not. His mind was full of business, of how to travel still farther on the path of prosperity, which he already had found.

Esther was reclining on a lounge in her home in Vancouver, reading a Red Cross magazine. Did Jack hold any place in her thoughts? No, not even a small corner. They had forgotten about each other, as I have said.

That evening Jack went to the Melbourne Business club for dinner with three other prosperous young business men, all of them married. When the meal was finished the conversation turned to matrimony.

"How comes it you never got married, Jack?" asked George Clifford as he passed cigars. "You're old enough and have enough coin to make some girl comfortable and happy."

Jack laughed as he lighted the weed. "Not me," he said as he puffed placidly. "I'll never get married. I'm going to be a hermit. Do you know, fellows, it's a fact that I've never been interested a bit in the fair sex? I'm all for business. I'm sincerely opposed to marriage—for myself, at least."

Clifford, who was five years older, looked over the rims of his glasses with a slight grimace and inquired:

"Don't you believe in love? Don't you believe that every one was made for some one?"

Another laugh, this time louder and longer, from Jack.

"I should say not!" he retorted. "There's no such thing as love. Marriage is a matter of business. When a fellow hasn't enough sense to save his money, he needs a woman to help him; and if he gets the right kind he's all right, and if he doesn't he's all wrong. I tell you I'm not interested in girls and I'll die a bachelor, as sure as the sun rises and sets."

Lachesis frowned. Such defiance! She was puzzled, but she was very resourceful. For days at a time she would stand and hold those two threads, one in each hand. But when she attempted to bring them together her arms would stiffen.

Six months before it was time for him to celebrate his twenty-eighth anniversary something put into Jack's head the idea of touring the States. As he had accumulated a comfortable pile of the metal so much desired on this globe, and as he had taken in a partner who was capable of conducting the business alone, there was no reason why he should not carry the idea into effect.

It was on the outskirts of Chicago that the accident occurred. The train hit a broken rail or something and the parlor car left the track. Only one person was severely injured, and that was Jack Watson, whose arm was broken.

He was taken to a Chicago hospital, where the arm was set. His condition, physically and financially, warranted a nurse being assigned to special duty on the case.

This was the first opportunity he had had to study woman at close range, and it proved decidedly interesting. The nurse was in constant attendance during the day and ready to answer his call at any time during the night. She was continually putting thermometers into his mouth and taking them out again, feeling his pulse, feeding him ice cream and other delicacies, and smiling. And she had a pretty face, always shining with good cheer, and a lot of other nice ways about her.

"That's funny," Jack told himself frequently. "I never knew a woman could be so useful in this busy world." And he got to wishing that his arm wouldn't be in any hurry about getting mended, and his mind began thinking strange thoughts; that is, strange for him.

Of course, you know the nurse was Esther Richards. But he did not. A lot of changes take place in a person between the ages of eight and twenty-five; and there was no more reason why he should associate this Miss Richards with the one of his school days in Ohio than that she should recognize her childhood sweetheart in this Mr. Watson who was her patient.

Had Jack been less reticent about himself their former acquaintanceship would have leaked out in the "small talk" that usually develops between a nurse and a convalescing patient; but as he was one who took things for granted and never displayed curiosity, especially concerning the affairs of women, he had not even asked the customary "Where is your home?" Naturally her professional reserve, acquired during nearly three years of training, precluded the possibility of her taking the initiative in such personal matters; so the fact that they had not been schoolmates and "puppy-love" sweethearts remained unrevealed.

He fought against the peculiar feeling that was creeping over him, but it was a losing fight. He gave up the struggle and confessed, first to himself and later to her, that he was in love with her. He told her all about it on the day he was to leave the hospital.

"Do you believe in love?" she inquired, as she stood beside the bed and retained that professional demeanor sufficiently to keep him from seizing her hand. "These days, people are beginning to have the idea that marriage is only a business contract."

Jack laughed and forgot all about Melbourne and real estate, business club dinners and hermits' lives.

"Love!" he echoed. "Surely, I believe in love. Every one was made for some one, and I was made for you. I've felt that ever since I first saw you standing by this bed and counting my heart-beats. Haven't you felt the same way?"

She forgot about "being professional" and her hand found its way into his.

"Perhaps," she confessed. "That's what we always read in books; and there may be something to it. Really, I feel as if I had known you always."

Lachesis smiled a smile of triumph. She drew the two threads together and held them side by side in one hand. With the other hand she reached into the happiness box and dabbed some of the contents on the threads. Then she carefully and methodically knotted them together.

You can't defy Lachesis and get away with it.

British Honduras.

British Honduras is in the tropics, but its climate is only sub-tropical. The maximum shade temperature is 98 degrees Fahrenheit, while the minimum is 50 degrees. Cholera, yellow fever and other tropical diseases occur from time to time, but on the whole the country is not unhealthy in comparison with the West Indies or the Central American countries. The dry season lasts from the middle of February to the middle of May. Rain occurs at intervals during the other months, and almost continuously during October, November and December. The annual rainfall averages about 81½ inches, but rises in some parts of the country to 150 inches or more. Easterly sea winds prevail during the greater part of the year.

FOR BABY'S TENDER SKIN.

A child's skin is tender as well as beautiful and eczema may be caused by chafing of clothing, the use of poor soap, exposure to cold or sudden change of temperature. Probably no treatment for eczema has ever proven so successful as Dr. Chase's Ointment, and this applies particularly to baby eczema. This ointment is delightfully soothing, stops the itching and consequently prevents scratching. Gradually the sores are healed up and the skin is left soft and velvety.

An Historic Sword.

Nursing Sister Keelands has taken back with her to her Strathroy home a sword presented to her by a wounded French officer, to whom it was given by his father, a veteran of the Franco-Prussian war. With it the son had slain four German officers at Verdun.

Making the Feathers Fly.

At Brussels, Ont., chicken-picking experts scored a new record when Wm. McQuarrie and Alex. Rutledge, with the assistance of two small boys as pinners, killed and dressed 488 birds in eleven hours at the East Huron Produce Emporium.

THE EXILED NOBLES.

Romanov Colony Lives In Safety In Crimea.

The grand dukes and other members of the Romanov colony interned in the Crimea have passed through dangerous times, but at last they seem to be in calm waters, protected by the Germans against Bolshevik ill-treatment. A correspondent of Az Est, the great Budapest newspaper, visited the Crimea just before Austria retired from the war and had talks with them. Grand Duke Nicholas refused to see him, but the enterprising Hungarian had a chat with Nicholas' aide-de-camp, Gen. Boldarev.

"It is a wonder that the grand dukes are living to-day," said the general. "The first commander of the Bolshevik troops set to guard them was a Georgian named Gollant. He took all possible precautions to ward off murderers. But his solicitude in this respect aroused the Soviet's suspicions and he was disposed. His successor was a Bolshevik, from Little Russia, named Zaddorovski, a cunning fellow. He announced far and wide that the grand dukes should undergo the harshest treatment. They should not escape with a mere death penalty, but should be systematically tortured, as such ruffians deserved. All the while he was secretly in league with the dukes; it was a matter of postponing the execution so long that it would at last be prevented by the advancing German troops. He succeeded in getting numerous postponements of the meeting of the Bolshevik judges and when at last there was nothing else to be done he declared that it would be better to torture the grand dukes before allowing them to die; was there any torture equal to living under fear of imminent and certain death?

"So the dukes went on living and the Germans went on advancing. Finally the German entry was so swift that the Bolsheviki had no time to escape. The Germans have treated us well. We have no reason for complaint. Now we freely associate with each other. The Bolsheviki strictly forbade this."

The Hungarian also was given an opportunity of seeing the dowager empress, Marie Feodorovna, but he omits to report that indomitable old lady's remarks, saying only that she is still full of hatred for the Germans. She is living with her daughter, the Grand Duchess Olga. In the Tsain castle, in the vicinity, Prince Yusupov, who killed Rasputin, is one of the residents.

The correspondent had an interesting talk with Grand Duke Mikhail Alexandrovitch, who was eager for news of the war. This grand duke said that the Bolsheviki has caused the Romanov colony many anxious days.

"Many days we gathered in the Grand Duke Nicholas' house in fear for our lives," he said. "I and my six sons were on their blacklist. A good person, however, saved us. Our property is confiscated and our house in Petrograd is destroyed. It is lucky for use that my estate and vineyards here in Aitodor still remain. My family and I have to subsist on their revenue. How goes it with peace? Won't the war soon be finished? We have all had enough of it."

A Good Haul.

A private soldier, spied a rooster prowling around a farm house in No Man's Land. Being hungry, and having an appetite for roast chicken, this private decided to crawl up on the rooster and trap him in the building. The Tommy was about to lay his hands on the astonished rooster when a German entered the rear door of the building bent on the same mission. Both were so surprised that they stood for a moment and glared at each other, then the Tommy motioned for the German to do a right flank on the prey they were after and both closed in on him. The rooster was captured by the Tommy, who later returned to the lines with both rooster and German in tow. Later, at the regimental P. C. the German roasted the chicken for his captor, who share it with him.

Bullet-proof Shields.

Portable trouches is the name given to portable bullet-proof shields used in the Italian army. They can be quickly formed into a kind of movable breastwork, behind which infantry can advance with comparative safety.

It Pays to Work.

Would you work industriously if you didn't have to? Would you work as earnestly and diligently as you do now?

Maybe not. Indeed, the chances are that you would knock off as soon as you learned that you didn't have to work any more if you didn't want to.

And of what use would you then be to the world, to society, to yourself?

Time would soon begin to hang heavily, and you would turn hither and thither in search of rest and entertainment.

Just here is where Satan would get his work in. He knows his business, and he attends to it. He wouldn't allow you to want and wait very long, but would take you into some high place and show you just lots of nice things, any or all of which you could have.

And with that suavity of manner, and clever palaver for which he is so famous, he would quiet your conscience, and lead you to think that you had been wrong in your notions as to what was right and proper for you to do.

Busy men and women—busy about matters and things necessary to the comfort and welfare of themselves, their families, and their neighbors—rarely go wrong. And it is among these that you find the happiest, most contented, most useful people.—Erasmus Wilson, in Pittsburg Gazetter-Times

THE TRYING TIME IN A WOMAN'S LIFE

Mrs. H. Membury, 325 Seaton St., Toronto, Ont., writes: "I have used Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and found them to be of great benefit to me, in fact, I consider they saved my life, and I have told many of my neighbours about them.

Two years ago last November I was in poor health. The doctor said it was change of life, as I was over forty years old, and that I would have to be very careful of myself. Shortly after that I received an awful shock that nearly killed me. The doctor my husband sent for said I would soon be all right, and sent up some medicine, but it only seemed to increase the trouble. I was then taken to the hospital. The doctors examined me, but could not understand my case.

Then they sent for a specialist, as they began to think it was my mind.

When the specialist came he was baffled, for I answered his questions all right. Every day I was getting weaker, and when my husband came he could see that I was going, as I could read his thoughts, but said nothing.

Next day a friend came with a cab and took me to their home. They got a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I started taking them and began to get better, and at the end of two weeks, I could walk around the room. I am now well and able to do my own work."

The Humming Birds.

The smallest and most brilliant in color of all the feathered creations are the humming birds, and of the 400 species none is to be found elsewhere than in this western hemisphere. It is noticed that humming birds once numerous in summer in Indiana have greatly diminished in number. An explanation is given that many thousands have been sacrificed in the millinery trade.

THE EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S CORSET COVER.

The flat, trim fit of this new corset cover will recommend it to particular women who like a close fitting garment of this kind. It is very cleverly cut and is especially good for women who are inclined to be round shouldered. It is cut all in one piece and may be slipped over the head or buttoned at the back. The pointed pieces at the back are crossed and buttoned at the waistline. The front edge is gathered to a straight band which is drawn around to the back and buttoned snugly about the waistline.

The lady's corset cover pattern No. 8914 is cut in 6 sizes—36 to 46 inches bust measure. The 36 inch size requires 1 yard 36 or 45 inch material, 4⅛ yards insertion, 6 yards edging and 1 yard ribbon.

MISS' OR SMALL WOMAN'S BOLERO DRESS

Never were the embroidery flouncings more attractive than they are this season, and designers are taking this into consideration in creating the summer styles. A girlish frock which features the use of flouncing is shown in No. 8895. The skirt is in one piece, with straight lower edge, and it is gathered to a dart-fitted underwaist which closes at the back. The sleeves may be long or short. The bolero is separate and is to be slipped over the head. It is gathered at the square neck in front to give a becoming fulness. A wide girdle or sash is worn with the dress.

The miss' and small woman's bolero dress No. 8895 is cut in three sizes, 16, 18 and 20 years. The 16 year size requires 2 yards 36 inch, or 2⅛ yards 16 inch flouncing, with 1½ yards 36 inch material and 2¼ yards of ribbon.

MISS' AND SMALL WOMAN'S DRESS.

The tailor made girl will like this simple frock for morning wear because it is trim looking and easy to make. The shirt waist is gathered at the shoulders and the neck is finished with a girlish round collar. A soft silk tie should be worn with the collar. The long sleeves are gathered into odd flaring cuffs. The sketches show two novel ways of finishing the front closing. The two gored skirt is gathered all around at the slightly raised waistline. The large outstanding pockets at the sides are a matter of choice.

The miss' and small women's dress pattern No. 8918 is cut in three sizes, 16, 18 and 20 years. Width at lower edge of skirt is 2 yards. The 16 year size requires 3¾ yards 36 inch, with ¼ yard 18 inch contrasting material.

EXPLOITS OF OUR SOLDIERS.

Some Facts Concerning the War Records Office.

In the days when the war was young and people in Canada were gasping to hear the accurate, considered story of the doings of the home battalions in the battle area, a man walked into the censor's office in London one evening and laid several columns of newspaper "copy" on the censor's desk. "I should like that stuff censored and despatched to-morrow morning," he said; and the censor opened his eyes in amazement. "It can't be done," he said. "We've got to have several days' notice of all that work." But it was done, nevertheless. The visitor was Lord Beaverbrook (then Sir Max Aitken); and Canada was soon reading the news which made the British newspapers envious.

At that period the Canadian War Records Office was emerging from the infant stage. It is now growing lustily, but people in Canada may not fully realize yet the importance of its activities and its pioneer work in rescuing a mass of vital information for the future historian. Under Lord Beaverbrook the office is making history in more ways than one. Especially is this true of the Literary and Editorial Section—a newly-developed branch controlling the production and publication of all books and pamphlets dealing with Canada in the war.

The Editor-in-Chief of the section is Capt. Theodore Goodridge Roberts, the well-known Canadian writer, of the New Brunswick Regiment and late of Headquarters, Canadian Corps. Working under him is a staff of four privates, all members of the Canadian Overseas Forces and all former journalists and writers. Every member of the section has seen overseas service and has been invalided to England. Their names are:—J. H. Holland, late 24th Canadian Battalion; Robin Richards, late P.P.C.L.I.; G. E. Hewit, late 28th Canadian Battalion; Stuart Martin, late No. 5 Canadian General Hospital, Salonika. It is the expectation of the editor to be in a position to employ other writers as the work increases and develops. The work already produced, or in course of production, by the section is sufficient to show that the department is playing an important part in historical compilation.

A book of the deeds of the Canadian V.C.'s is now in the hands of the publishers and will shortly be on sale in Canada and the United Kingdom. Another dealing with the exploits which brought other honors and awards is to follow. A short history of every Canadian Battalion is also in course of preparation. Several of these books are now being published and will be on sale almost immediately. Historical summaries of each Canadian Brigade from the time of its organization to recent operations—as far as the censor will allow—have also been written. Most of these have been sent to the Department of Militia and Defence, Ottawa, and have already been published officially.

A book of "Battle Pieces"—short, tense, true stories of personal interest—taken from incidents of the war, is also being written. These stories are intended to bring home to the public the human fighting man; his deeds are stripped of cold official language and his actions, sufferings, triumphs, and heroism are shown to rival anything in fiction. A volume on the work of the Canadian hospitals in the Near East is also being prepared—the five Canadian hospitals which went out to Demnos, Mudros, Egypt and Saloniki in the early days.

Besides all these the editor deals with the periodical publications of "Canada in Khaki" and the "Canadian War Pictorial"—two productions illustrated by official photos and pictures, the contributors being all well-known writers and artists. Major Charles G. D. Roberts, who is now busy with volume IV. of "Canada In Flanders," is also attached to the department for the purpose of writing this special history of the Canadian troops at Vimy Ridge. He has access to all historical documents and is aided wherever necessary by the staff.

The profits of all these works go to swell the Canadian War Memorials Fund. Apart from the immediate value of the work of the editorial section, it is apparent that were it not for constant literary rescue work much valuable and important information would be overwhelmed in the rapid accumulation of battle incidents, all of which demand preservation. The doings of two years or more ago must be kept alive. The future historian cannot be expected to have the time to write all, nor to write with the "thrill" which comes to the men who know just what and how and when.

"Mopping Up."

Washington officials say that demobilization of the American forces overseas will require two years, especially as "it will take more than a year to remove German wire entanglements in France alone." It is estimated that ten years will be required to make Belgian lands productive, all vegetation having been killed by the poison gas.

A CANADIAN WHO WENT

LOUIS KEENE WRITES IMPRESSIONS OF WAR.

Well-known Artist Tells of the Different Sides of the Great Struggle—He Describes Episodes That Are Humorous and Others That Are Grim and Also Gives Poem Written by a "Tommy."

"CRUMPS" they're called. And they're quite no joke. In a book which whets the curiosity at once by calling itself "Crumps," Louis Keene, "a Canadian who went," describes how "they" came to achieve such a fascinating title. It must be noted, he writes, that—

"Sometimes names of shells go through several changes. For example, high explosives in the early part of the war were called 'Black Marias,' that being the slang name for the English police patrol wagon. Then they were called 'Jack Johnsons,' then 'coal boxes,' and finally they were christened "crumps' on account of the sound they make—a sort of cru-ump noise—as they explode. 'Rum jar' is the trench mortar. 'Sausage' is the slow-going aerial torpedo, a beastly thing about six feet long, with fins like a torpedo. It has 210 pounds of high explosive and makes a terrible hole. 'Whizz bang' is shrapnel."

When the war broke out Keene was quietly sketching up in the Laurentian Mountains. He was called in by his paper to do war cartoons. But being so far from the centre of real activity didn't appeal to this young adventurer, who, just as soon as he could possibly get into a branch of the service that meant business, found himself in a transport ship on the high seas. Then came a session at Salisbury Plain, followed by actual trench warfare.

The book contains a quantity of snappy, often quite vivid, pictures of life under conditions which never fail to furnish excitement of one sort or another. Now it will be a tense moment under fire:

"We were in our cellars, and gradually the shelling crept up toward us. Slowly a solemn, dread fear took possession of my being. In a flash I began to devise a philosophy of death, for my chances were fading with every crash. I took out my pocketbook, containing some letters from my mother and some personal things, and put them on one of the beams, so that, being in another part of the building, they might perhaps be found some day. The shelling continued and shells dropped completely round the cellars, demolishing nearly everything in sight. The enemy evidently wanted to obliterate the whole place. The smell of the smoke and the dirt from the debris were choking, and every minute we expected to be our last. Suddenly it stopped. Philosophy and fear disappeared simultaneously as I spluttered out a choking laugh of relief. Then Hawkins, my servant, in a scared voice, started, and the others joined in, singing the old marching refrain of the training camps:

"'Hail, hail, the gang's all here;
What the hell do we care!
What the hell do we care!
Hail, hail, the gang's all here;
What the hell do we care NOW!'"

But, again, the entry will tell of a very much gentler occupation. For instance:

"The men are hunting for lice in their underwear. This is the kind of conversation that is coming through from the next cellars: 'I've got you beat — that's forty-seven.' 'Wait a minute'—a sound of tearing cloth—'but look at this lot, mother and young.' 'With my forty and these you'll have to find some more.' They were betting on the number they could find. I peel off my shirt myself and burn them off with a candle. I glory in the little pop they make when the heat gets to them. All the insect powder in the world has been tried out on them and they've won."

Here one finds him reporting the return of a weary but undaunted squad:

"Marching through the sloughed-up mud, through shell holes filled with putrid water, among most depressing conditions, I saw a working party returning to their billets. They were wet through and wrapped up with scarves, wool helmets and gloves. Over their clothes was a veneer of plastered mud. They marched along at a slow swing and in a mournful way sang:

"'Left—Left—Left
We—are—the tough Guys!'

"Apparently there are no more words to this song because, after a pause of a few beats, they commenced again:

"'Left—Left—Left.'

"They looked exactly what they said they were."

Keene found the following poem written on the wall of a smashed-up chateau:

"I've travelled many journeys in my one-score years and ten,
And oft enjoyed the company of jovial fellow men;
But of all the happy journeys none can compare to me
With the Red Cross special night express from the trenches to the sea.

"It's Bailleul, Boulogne, Blighty, that's the burden of the song;
Oh, speed the train along.
If you've only half a stomach and you haven't got a knee,
You'll choke your groans and try to shout the chorus after me.
Bailleul, Bologne, and Blighty, dear old Blighty 'cross the sea.'

"Now, some of us are mighty bad and some are wounded slight,
And some will see their three-score years and some won't last the night.
But the Red Cross train takes up the strain all in a minor key,
And sings Boulogne and Blighty as she rumbles to the sea.

"Oh, it's better than the trenches, and it's better than the rain,
It's better than the mud and stink;
we're going home again.
Though most of us have left some of us on the wrong side of the sea.
We are a lot of blooming cripples,
but—down-hearted? No, siree.

"There's a holy speed about this train, for each of us can see
That we will cross the shining channel that lies 'twixt her and me,
To the one and only Blighty, our our Blighty, 'cross the sea,'
Where the blooming Huns can never come, 'twixt her and home and me."

MISTAKE ECHOED ROUND THE WORLD

Russian Woman Looked Like Princess Tatiana.

ENTERTAINED AT TOIKO

Mrs. Ariadne Roomanov, the Wife of the Former Secretary of Kerensky, Found It Difficult to Convince Her Hosts That She Was Not the Daughter of Nicholas II. But Just a Plain Democrat.

WRITERS of farces and light fiction are fond of dealing with the troubles that arise through mistaken identity, but in real life it is not often that cases of this nature are found. People may look enough alike to be mistaken when one glances at them casually, and sometimes amusing little mix-ups occur with brothers or sisters as the chief actors in them. During the past year, however, Mrs. Ariadne Roomanov, a very beautiful Russian woman, has found that it may be inconvenient to resemble people of exalted rank. Mrs. Ariadne Roomanov is the wife of the man who was formerly the secretary of Kerensky. She is a highly educated and brilliant Russian lady, belonging to the intellectual group in her country, as did so many of Kerensky's supporters. Many of her own countrywomen had noted that she was the double in appearance of the Princess Tatiana, daughter of the late Czar Nicholas II. In her own country, that resemblance did not cause her any inconvenience, as it was a generally accepted fact. After the fall of Kerensky, Mrs. Roomanov was one of the little group of Russian intellectuals who decided to escape to America. She crossed Asia and finally arrived safely in Japan. There she found an unexpected welcome awaiting her. The Japanese officials greeted her as a princess of the royal Russian household, and an entire wing of the imperial palace at Tokio had been reserved for her during her stay at the Japanese capital. It was with difficulty that the lady convinced her hosts that she was a democrat with very simple tastes, and that she did not wish to live in a palace. The Japanese continued to treat her as a daughter of the Czar. They believed that she was traveling incog, and that she did not want to admit her disguise. It will be remembered that some months ago the story appeared in Canadian papers that a daughter of the Czar had escaped from Russia, and that she was on her way to America, where she intended to make her living with her music. This story was afterwards denied officially, and it grew out of the Japanese mistake regarding the identity of Mrs. Roomanov.

MRS. ARIADNE ROOMANOV.

M. Clemenceau.

Some accuse him of being an aristocrat at heart—certainly an old-world distinction and courtesy cling to him. He is charming in conversation. Nor is it hard to imagine him one of the most noted duelists of the day. He has the manner which goes with swordsmanship; alertness, an intrepid eye, a certain bluff heartiness. Yet he is practical withal, and combines the acuteness of a man of business with the instincts of a preux chevalier. He has a double character; one half student and philosopher—some one caught him reading Theocritus in the true spirit of Macaulay's Scholar—the other half man of action. And, sometimes, no doubt, the philosopher is uppermost killing the physical activity. Again, a temperamental impatience to cut a way through difficulties may lead to gestures which another judgment would repudiate. Indeed, the balance is hard to establish, for his Gallic nature is speedily aflame and his temper leaps to the combat at the signal of attack. Yet generally it is well controlled by a brain that is steel-cold in its analysis and piercing power.—Atlantic.

How Patriotism Is Taught.

The schools are careful to foster in the student at all times, as a part of his training in patriotism, a deep respect for the Japan of traditions. To this end "educational trips" form an instructive and valuable part of the school program. A fund is set aside for the purpose; the student himself pays into it a small graduated sum each month. The Government furnishes railroad transportation at a nominal rate. The students, with their teachers, travel third class, sleep at cheap inns, forty or more in a room, live on the usual frugal diet of rice and tea, with a little fish, perhaps, and the ubiquitious "daikon" or pickled radish. These expeditions fit quite easily into an established custom, for pilgrimages are a national institution. Up and down their little country, the Japanese are never weary of tramping. And with that curious rigidity which characterizes even Japanese whimsicalities, there is no deviation from prescribed formulas. Even the moon is ticketed, and must be viewed in autumn from one of eight "moon-viewing" temples, or the parapet of the temple at Lake Biwa, made famous in the eleventh century as the place where Murasaki Shikibu wrote her "Genji Monogatari." The sunrise is scheduled for appreciation off Futami beach, on the southeastern coast. One must climb a hill and look upside down at the "Bridge of Heaven," a narrow, pine-fringed spit of sand running into the Japan Sea.

No wonder that Japan's past is a living past. The ancient heroes are not dead, but exert their subtle influence through the intimate contacts of the daily life of the people. One meets them under a thousand guises—as legends imprinted on the common blue and white towels upon which the people wipe their hands, as the ever-fresh inspiration for artists in choosing subjects for their paintings, in the commemoration festivals at the countless temples, in the allusions scattered through the "Hundred Poems," familiar to the lips of every man, woman and child in Japan, reappearing in the classic "Noh" dramas inherited from the 14th and 15th centuries, in the popular theatres, and, finally, so that no one may escape, in the "movies." All the really cultured roots of Japan are buried deep in the past, and although the Japanese student of today is thrust unceremoniously into a modern school system of western derivation, his western education sits but lightly upon him. He never breaks free of his own inherited influences, which are peculiarly strong, his own angle of vision, which still has its feudal slant.—Asia Magazine.

President Paes of Portugal Has Been Assassinated

Serious Trouble is Feared in Lisbon as Result of the Turn of Events —Promises Important Revelations.

PARLIAMENT WILL MEET

LONDON, December 16. — The Portuguese parliament will meet today in accordance with the constitution to form a presidency, it was officially announced at the Portuguese legation here to-day. Canto Castro has been mentioned as a successor to President Paes, who was assassinated late Saturday night.

A despatch from Lisbon to-day stated that the Unionist leader, Camacho, is under the protection of the police.

TROUBLE FEARED.

(Special to Examiner.)

PARIS, December 16. — Serious trouble is feared in Lisbon, as the result of reports that the assassination of President Paes, was part of an extensive plot to overthrow the government, according to the despatches received from that city today.

Officers and non-coms. parade the streets, crying "Vengeance!"

An accomplice of the dead assassin begs not to be lynched, promising important revelations if his life is spared.

Tamagnini Barbosa, who is temporarily filling the presidency, is mentioned as permanent successor. It is regarded as possible that a military government may be constituted.

LISBON, December 16. — Lisbon mourning for Sibonio Paes, its murdered president. All flags are at half mast. Crowds parade the streets crying for vengeance. Escorted by cavalry the president's body was removed to the Belem palace at three o'clock this morning in order that the demonstrations would not be increased. The warships in the harbour fired a salute as the body was carried into the palace.

It was learned to-day that Antonio Paes, a brother of the president, was wounded by a sabre thrust during the confusion which followed the assassination. The assassin is believed to have been a member of the Young Republicans. An accomplice has been arrested.

A Visit to Versailles

Formal Conferences Resumed This Afternoon—A Citizen of Paris.

PRESENTED WITH SCROLL

(By Robt. J. Bender.)

PARIS, Dec. 16.—President Wilson motored this morning to Versailles, where the peace treaty will be signed. He briefly inspected the palace and park. On the way to Versailles the President's car was showered with flowers by children. Rain began to fall when the party was returning, but no inconvenience was experienced. Thomas Nelson Page, Ambassador to Italy, and Mrs. Page, were the Wilson's guests at luncheon in the Murat Palace. President Poincare and his wife, with a cavalry escort, conducted the President and Mrs. Wilson to the Hotel De Ville for the official reception. Tremendous throngs cheered them along the road. After the ceremonies making Wilson a citizen of Paris, he was presented with a scroll declaring his citizenship. The President of the Council, on behalf of the city, then presented Mrs. Wilson with a brooch composed of an olive branch encrusted with diamonds, super-imposed on which were six white enamelled peace doves. At 3.30 this afternoon the President and Colonel House were to visit Premier Clemenceau at the Foreign Office to repay the latter's call and resume formal conferences.

STRIKE IN GERMANY

Special to the Examiner:

LONDON, Dec. 16.— Mathias Erzberger, who headed the German armistice delegation, has again complained of the severity of the terms of the armistice, according to messages here to-day from Amsterdam and other sources.

Erzberger asked for the raising of the blockade, liberation of prisoners of war and the immediate opening of peace negotiations.

Strike Spreading.

Amsterdam despatches declare that the strike in Berlin has reached serious proportions, only two newspapers being printed, these being small leaflets. Three hundred and fifty thousand workmen have stopped work, the despatches say.

Has Resigned.

Special to The Examiner:

GENEVA, Dec. 16.— George Ledebour, Socialist, is reported to have resigned from the German government.

Herr Breckdorff-Fratzau has arrived in Berlin from Copenhagen and probably will succeed Foreign Secretary Solf.

The Workmen's and Soldiers' Council was scheduled to meet to-day.

UNDERWRITERS HELD INSTRUCTIVE MEETING

Several Matters of Importance Were Discussed.

There was a very enthusiastic meeting of the Life Underwriters for Central Ontario at the Empress Hotel Grill Room last Friday noon, when some 40 life insurance men sat down to dinner. The chair was taken by Mr. R. F. Sedgwick who, with a few well selected remarks, introduced the different speakers. Mr. A. E. Dawson, of the Imperial Life, gave a most instructive and profitable talk on the ethics of Life Insurance. It was one of those intellectual treats that the local association get from time to time from Mr. Dawson. Mr. McIver, Supervisor of the Prudential, was next introduced and laid particular emphasis on the importance of team play and brotherhood among the Life Underwriters, and he proved to be a most interesting and common sense speaker. Mr. W. R. Widdess, of the Canada Life, who was the official representative of the International Life Underwriters' convention in New York, gave a very interesting report of the convention, which was highly appreciated. Several matters of importance to Life Underwriters and the public in general were freely discussed.

Those taking part were Messrs. A. J. McClellan, of the Imperial, Ward Patterson, of the Great West, A. G. Roberts, of the Metropolitan, and J. I. Allen, of the Prudential, and a little diversion was provided by way of a recitation by Mr. Hughson Johnston, of the Monarch, after which the gathering broke up with the singing of God Save the King.

Three Months for Edward Wainwright

Was Picked Up in the C.P.R. Station at Havelock.

Edward Wainwright doesn't like work. In this morning's police court, Magistrate Dumble kindly gave him a job which will occupy his mind for three months to come. The scene of activity is the county jail. Wainwright had the misfortune to appear on a charge of vagrancy some time in the past, but had the extreme good fortune to be allowed to go, on his promise to find work. His Worship, ever mindful of the health of Wainwright, asked him to reside at the county jail for a period of three months with hard labour. He was found vegetating in the station room at Havelock by a C.P.R. detective and asked to accompany him to Peterborough.

WAS REMANDED FOR A WEEK.

Bert Williams, a Smith Township Indian, appeared in the Police Court this morning on a serious charge. The case was enlarged for a week until more information can be gained.

RELATIONS ARE GROWING TENSE

Special to The Examiner:

ROME, Dec. 16.— Relations between the Italians and Jugo-Slavs along the Austrian coast are growing tense, according to despatches from Zara to the Giornale Italia. The presence of French warships, openly siding with the Jugo-Slavs, is increasing the danger of a clash. The American fleet, it is believed, will lend an impartial tone.

WILSON HAS A TRYING TIME IN VISIT TO PARIS

President's Bed is Too Short—What the Peace Apostle Had for Breakfast.

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, Dec. 16.—President Wilson's empire bed is too short, but he is sleeping in it nevertheless. The custodian of Murat Palace did not want to change it, owing to the fact that none of the other beds match the Napoleonic fittings in the room.

King Victor Emmanuel, of Italy, will call at the Murat Palace Thursday afternoon.

Simply "Wonderful."

By Ferd S. Ferguson.

(United Press.)

PARIS, Dec. 16.— The conference between President Wilson and Premier Clemenceau is regarded as having had the most satisfactory results from the American viewpoint of any of the Inter-Allied discussions yet held. The understanding displayed between the two is described as "wonderful." It is regarded as one of the most profitable hours the President has spent since the discussions opened.

Liberty and Justice.

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, Dec. 16.—President Wilson in a speech at the City Hall to-day, declared that America has established its right "to the full fellowship of those peoples here and throughout the world who reverence the right of genuine liberty and justice."

Corinthian a Total Loss

Canadian Pacific Steamer Wrecked in Fundy Bay—The Crew Saved.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Dec. 16. — Just eight hours after she had left St. John for Glasgow with a large general cargo for the British Admiralty, the steamship Corinthian, 7,332 gross tons, Canadian Pacific Ocean Services, was wrecked Saturday afternoon shortly before 3 o'clock on Northwest Ledge, Brier Island, at the mouth of the Bay of Fundy, off the Nova Scotia coast, about 60 miles from St. John. Capt. David Tannock and his entire crew of 86 were rescued early Sunday morning by the Government steamer Aberdeen and the patrol boat Festubert of the Canadian Navy service, and they were brought to St. John Sunday. Fishermen along the shore aided in the rescue work in a heavy sea and dense fog. According to Capt. Tannock's testimony, the Corinthian cannot be salved. She is a total loss.

The last report received from the rescue steamers came about 6:30 o'clock Sunday night to J. C. Chesley, agent for the Marine and Fisheries Department here, and was to the effect that the Aberdeen and Festubert were rescuing the crew, and if weather conditions were favourable they would start out at daybreak for St. John. The Corinthian's Captain is aboard the Aberdeen.

Cause Not Known Yet.

When Pilot James Bennett took the Corinthian from her dock and saw her safely past Partridge Island early Saturday morning, there was quite a sea running, and there was a fog. During the morning the sea grew worse and the fog more dense. What happened aboard the Corinthian, whether she lost her course or whether the steering gear went out of order, is not known yet, but at 2:55 p.m., St. John time, the wireless operator at Partridge Island picked up the Corinthian's distress signal.

BROCKVILLE, December 16.—For the purpose of conserving the supply of coal, the churches of Brockville inaugurated union services yesterday for the winter months. The Anglicans are combining in one church, and the Methodists and the Presbyterians in another.

IS AWAITING THE OUTCOME

Reichstag to be Summoned in Defiance of the Ebert Government —A Proclamation.

"PEOPLE'S ARMY"

(United Press.)

(By Frank J. Taylor.)

BERLIN, December 16. — Berlin is awaiting expectantly the outcome of the convocation of the Reichstag by its president, Konstantin Febrenbach, in defiance of the Ebert Haase government.

The meeting was to be held to-day to sumond the Reichstag here later "somewhere in the Rhine land." The present government, which intended to give the ministry Parliamentary support, has announced that any deputy attending the proposed insurgent session, will be guilty of treason.

Wild rumours are afloat concerning the significance of Fehrenbach's move. It is reported that Field Marshal von Hindenburg will send his troops to protect the meeting.

The Ebert Hasse government attained its ascendancy through the election of delegates to the National Workmen's and Soldiers council, in which the Spartacus group failed to gain a single representative.

Chancellor Ebert's majority Socialists led with seven workmen and four soldier delegates. Dr. Hasse was next with five more workmen and two soldiers.

The government has issued a proclamation, calling for volunteers for a "People's Army." It also has urged the demobilized soldiers not to remain unemployed, but to go to the country, where labor is scarce, and food more plentiful.

People supporting the present government want strong action against the Spartacus group and a quick peace.

Will Appear at the Empire To-night and To-morrow.

Mary Miles Minter in "Rosemary Climbs the Heights," is the attraction in a five part picture at the Empire for the next two days.

Miss Minter enters the story in the simplest garb of the village girl and daughter of the struggling old father, a descendant of old and settled Holland stock. Because of Rosemary's talent for carving clever dolls, she attracts the attention of a party of city artists in general, and a young and handsome composer in particular. She is transported into the whirl of city life.

In her attire, for a costume ball, Miss Minter is said to wear one of the most elaborately made dresses ever shown on the screen. The lace is precious Elizabethan handiwork, the heavy satin is of the kind we no longer can buy anywhere and has been treasured by Miss Minter's mother until just such an opportunity, and the beadwork was designed by the Great Poiret.

"Rosemary's" costume is that of Juliet. Alan Forest, as "Ricardo," the composer and lover, gives a fine impersonation of Romeo. Miss Minter used to take Shakespearian parts in private theatricals and always had a leaning toward Juliet.

THE WEATHER

There is a marked difference in the weather that we are having now and that which prevailed a year ago at this time. One year ago to-day the thermometer was down to 25 degrees below zero, while to-day it is above the freezing point. One year ago yesterday it was 11 degrees below zero, while on Sunday the thermometer was up to 41 degrees. This fall has been, up to the present time very much like that of 1911—seven years ago, the first snow falls and cold dips coming on practically the same dates. In that year the weather was foggy and mild from the 8th to the 19th, and there was a "green" Christmas. Sufficient snow did not come until the 27th to make sleighing. January, February and March had some very cold spells, but they were not long continued at any time. The snowfall was heavier than usual that winter and lay on the ground till a later date in the spring than customary. These facts are mentioned because it is thought by some who have made a special study of such things that the weather has a tendency to repeat itself every seven years. For example, last winter was unusually severe; so was that of 1910, (seven years previous), and that of 1903, (again seven years.) While this seven year cycle does not always hold good, it occurs so frequently that it is believed there is some natural law behind it, and that it is not merely a coincidence—W.P.

Good Working Majority for Lloyd George Government

No Definite Returns Available for Several Days—Labour Party Hope to Win Over One Hundred Seats—Polling in Ireland.

(Canadian Press.)

LONDON, December 16. — Later estimates of the Lloyd George government majority place it at about 175, judging from the scrutineer figures. No definite returns will be available for several weeks.

Considering the novel conditions under which the elections were held and the necessity of waiting for a fortnight before the ballots are counted ,there is very little indulgence in speculation as to the result.

It is universally admitted to be almost a foregone conclusion that the Lloyd George Government has been victorious, and will probably have some four hundred members in the new House of Commons. The greatest curiosity centres on the strength of the Labour vote, which under the new conditions, is of an unknown quantity. While it is believed that the women of South England mainly supported the coalition candidates, it would be no surprise if it is found that in the Midland and the Northern industrial counties the women's vote largely supported labour.

The Labour party hopes to win over 100 seats, but it is believed that had the elections been postponed until after the treaty of peace was signed the party would have secured at least 200. Political speculation is chiefly concerned with the reconstruction of the Cabinet after the election. One rumor credits Premier George with favoring the appointment of a first Woman Minister. The name of "Pankhurst" is mentioned in this connection.

Has been in Ontario.

Miss Christabel Pankhurst, the noted suffragette, promised the voters that when the womans' regime prevails in parliament, every house, no matter how small, will be lighted and heated and served by electricity.

The British parliament, she asserted, will be responsible for the electricity that turns the mangles, cooks the meals and warms the houses. Why should women drag coal scuttles about, she said, and stand over steaming washtubs, and stand for hours over the old fashioned ranges, which not only eat up coal, but cook the cooks, when by legislation and electricity, the burden of the world could be lifted?

Polling in Ireland.

Polling in the greater part of Ireland passed quietly except for minor collisions between Sinn Feiners and Nationalists.

A close analysis of the voting shows that the Nationalists have been hopelessly beaten by the Sinn Feiners, even in places supposed to be Nationalist strongholds.

Asquith Rebukes Heckler.

Ex-Premier Asquith had another strenuous day on Saturday, touring East Fife, and addressing eight meetings, at most of which he was severely heckled, but votes of confidence submitted to them were passed, except at Ladybank, where the voting was equal. At a meeting at Leven a heckler asked: "Why did your wife visit the German prisoners?" Mr. Asquith replied: "That is a most indecent suggestion—my wife never visited any German prisoners."

At Kichin, Lord Robert Cecil was heckled by soldiers and replying to their questions, declared that the government did not hurry the election to escape the soldiers vote.

Labour's Reply to the Premier.

Mr. Lloyd George's challenge to the Labour party at Camberwell was promptly taken up by the Labourites. Robert Clynes, speaking at Nottingham, said that the Labour party was the same party which two years ago decided to support Mr. Lloyd George. The only difference was that was larger. It was true that in some cases those of the party who took extreme views, which he did not share, had been able to gradually influenced certain local action, but four out of five Labour candidates now before the country had not been chosen by that small minority of extremists, but by the great trade unions.

Havelock Boy Killed

George Kelly Was Struck by a C. P.R. Locomotive.

George Kelly, 16 years of age, was almost instantly killed yesterday while working on the coal chutes at the C. P. R. yards at Havelock. An engine which was shunting cars on the siding, backed up and caught Kelly, who was thrown beneath the locomotive, badly mangling his body, which was picked up by Constable Sandbach a few minutes after the accident. Kelly's parents reside in the village of Havelock.

The coroner, Dr. Holdcroft, has decided to hold an inquest on Wednesday, December 18th.

Wilson Moved By Greeting

Americans Have Witnessed the Suffering Caused by War.

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, Dec. 16.—President Wilson, speaking at the Hotel De Ville to-day, said: "Your greeting has raised many emotions within me. It is with no ordinary sympathy that the people of the United States, for whom I have the privilege of speaking, have viewed the sufferings of the people of France. Many of our own people have been themselves witnesses of those sufferings. We were the more deeply moved by the wrongs of the war because we know the manner in which they were perpetrated."

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

MONDAY, DECEMBER 16TH, 1918.

THE HEALTH ASSOCIATION.

The announcement that the annual social evening of the Peterborough Health Association is to be held on Friday, December 27th, should remind the people of Peterborough that this event is the principal fund-producing enterprise of the Association, and on that account it is essential that there should be liberal patronage. The great work that the Health Association has been carrying on in Peterborough merits the enthusiastic commendation and support of the citizens generally. The Health Association has been to this city what the Red Cross has been to our soldiers overseas. To the homes that have been invaded by illness, especially in the cases where nourishment was needed, the Health Association has brought invaluable assistance and comfort. In spite of the war and its calls which made the continuance of the Association's mission a difficult one and interfered to some extent with the plans for child welfare work and other features that had been formulated, yet the Association has gone faithfully and steadily on. No local organization is more worthy of support than this little band of public-spirited citizens who had the vision to appreciate the necessity of such a body and the energy and perserverance required to successfully launch and carry on the movement. The support of the public for the coming sociala evening and for the Association's work generally is urged.

FREE AT LAST.

Just now the attention of the Canadian people is divided between the Canadians who have gone into Germany and their comrades who are just coming out of that country—the prisoners of war who are being released from their terrible bondage. During the past few weeks the cables have brought to a number of Peterborough homes the glad tidings that some of our gallant lads who rushed into the big game over there in the earlier days of the war and fell into the hands of the pitiless Hun, have been repatriated, and all Peterborough will unite in rejoicing with the relatives of those unfortunate lads over their release from the terrible conditions that have existed in German war camps. How awful those conditions were we are only beginning to find out, and the stories of heartless ill-treatment and brutality that the repatriated prisoners are telling will surely have their effect upon the peace deliberations.

Peterborough rejoices that her sons are at last free, and when the men come back there should be no warmer reception for anyone than for the soldiers who have suffered in the hands of the enemy. The hardships they experienced during their durance vile should earn them a welcome home that in its warmness will in a small measure make up for what they have suffered.

DECISION WEEK.

To many citizens this present week will be a week of decision. There is a steadily growing conviction that the civic management for next year should be entrusted to the best talent that the experience of other years can produce, and because of this conviction the call to service is being brought before men, who although splendidly fitted in ability and other qualities to fill public positions, have never before considered the question of offering themselves for municipal offices. The lack of interest that has characterised other municipal elections, the facility with which the old campaigners slid into power while better qualified men were left at home, have been factors that made men hesitate before placing their services at the disposal of their fellow-citizens. Such considerations should be disregarded at this crisis in Peterborough's history. The need of the finest ability we have in Peterborough seems so apparent that constant reference to it would appear unnecessary were it not that the experiences of others years have shown that the citizens have been careless and neglectful in regard to the men they have chosen to administer their affairs. This year, it is to be hoped, those residents of Peterborough who possess the attributes that should be looked for in civic rulers, if the community is to advance and progress, will heed the solicitation of their friends and responsively listen to the call.

In the matter of councils, Peterborough has been no better or no worse than the average Canadian municipality. We have had aldermen that were faithful servants of the public—we have had others that served nobody but themselves. We have had some aldermen who could talk gracefully in public, and others who talked—but not gracefully. We have had civic legislators whose motto was "Keep down the taxes," and who carried that principal to such extremes that they substituted parsimony for economy, and there have been others who went to the other extreme. Whatever has been the calibre of our councils in the past, the ratepayers have little cause to complain. They elected them—indeed often by acclamation.

Peterborough has been drifting along with other Canadian cities, and if we have not got as much to show as we should for the expenditure of our civic revenues, who is to blame? Who chose our managing board? Nobody but ourselves.

It is about time to stop drifting. The problems of reconstruction are too important to be handed over to a council selected in the usual haphazard style. For next year let us secure, if possible, a board of directors that will show us some dividends at the end of 1919.

LET THE PRISONER STAND FORTH.

"The policy of the British Government so far as those men who planned and started the war is concerned will be founded on justice of the nature meted out in the highest courts in the land."

These words, spoken by Sir Eric Geddes, crystallize the opinion of British people of many shades of opinion that the arch-criminal of Europe, who now rests in an old-world village of Holland, must be brought to the Judgment Hall.

For by whatever standard we measure his guilt, the number of innocent persons he has done to death, the homes he has made desolate, the treasures he has stolen, the lust he has connived at, William Hohenzollern stands condemned. He should appear to-day in the prisoner's dock rather than in the salon of a noble palace.

Self-condemned but unrepentant, self-accused but without remorse, braggart in times of triumph, a deserter from the colours in days of defeat and disaster, he talks boastingly of an ancestry whose blood he has shamed, of a family honour which he has belied.

The late Kaiser is not numbered among the rulers who can say with Charles the Second of England, that their words are their own, their deeds are their ministers. In the hour of his success he would have resented such a division of responsibility; he cannot hide behind it in the hour of dark failure. His braggart speeches from the day he ascended the throne have been variations on the single theme of his own glorification and with a contemptuous insolence he has not shirked responsibility except to assume partnership with a Gott of his own fashioning.

There is no single crime perpetrated throughout the war from the Louvain massacre to the murder of Captain Fryatt, from the sinking of hospital ships to the revival of a callous form of slavery in occupied country, for which William Hohenzollern cannot be held personally responsible. His indicement runs through all the crimes of a Newgate Calendar. "Qui facit per alium, facit per se"—"who acts through the agency of another acts on his own behalf," is still a maxim of English law. Yet not alone by this is the ex-Kaiser condemned:

On August 10, 1914, William Hohenzollern telegraphed to President Wilson: "Belgian neutrality had to be violated on strategic grounds." The same William Hohenzollern who ordered his troops in the Boxer rising to "act like Huns" did not change his sentiments when he found himself pitted against Britain and France. Dr. Muhlon in his recently published diary writes, "The Kaiser himself said in the presence of an assemblage of officers that he had enough prisoners; he hoped his officers would see to it that no more were taken."

Napoleon stormed with rage when reports reached his ears that prisoners had been ill-treated by his officers, but William Hohenzollern rewarded his faithful gaolers with Iron Crosses and the august favour. He stayed his hand when the raising of his royal finger would have brought relief. The execution of Captain Fryatt and of Edith Cavell was not carried out until the master murderer at Potsdam had expressed his personal approval of the sentence.

So the great criminal of Europe basks in the spotlight and is pictured by imaginative correspondents as a sort of unfortunate hero who still sits in a halo of regal sanctity. These foreign journalists vie with one another to catch the droppings that fall from his swinish mouth. They see only the tawdry jewelry of a monarchy he has brought into disrepute and the bloodstains of his hands are washed away by their mawkish sentimentality.

But the foul heart of the Beast is bared. The Allies owe a duty to the men and women he has murdered. A pledge was made in the hour of suffering by Mr. Asquith when he declared in solemn tones in the House of Commons: "His Majesty's Government is determined to bring to bring to justice the criminals, whoever they may be and whatever station they may occupy."

That promise still holds good.

There can be no amnesty for this master criminal and it is an insult to our Imperial honour to believe that we would barter over the blood of our brothers, or out of weakness would become accessories in the murder of our own women and children.—Montreal Standard.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

To use baseball language, the Allies want to know who is going to manage Germany before that country gets a franchise in the League of Nations.

Roosevelt remarked that not one American soldier in a thousand knew President Wilson's fourteen peace conditions. He might have added that nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand were more interested in the National League than they were in the League of Nations.

The response to the appeal for the children's Christmas treat has been most gratifying. The increased contributions this year are appreciated by the War Veterans, who have found that toys and other articles necessary for the success of the event have considerably increased in price. There is still a chance to help this splendid movement by sending your donation in to the Examiner Office or the G.W.V.A. Rooms.

A Second Carpentier.

Now that the war is over France will present another candidate for world honors in boxing in the person of Eugene Criqui, bantamweight. It will be remembered that Georges Carpentier started his ring career as a bantam, and Criqui's prowess already exceeds that of the famous French idol.

Criqui has knocked out every boxer who has been sent against him in the international shows over there. Not so long ago the American contingent sent Eugene Clifford, a doughboy, against Criqui, and the Frenchman landed a haymaker in the second round. The next American entry was Jimmy O'Day, a good featherweight from Pittsburg, who is in the field artillery. One round sufficed for the Smoky City lad, and his seconds threw in the sponge. Criqui is said to have a wonderful left.

Moss Bread.

The Indians along the Columbia river make a kind of bread from a moss that grows on the spruce fir tree. This moss is prepared by placing it in bags, sprinkling it with water, and permitting it to ferment. Then it is rolled into balls as big as a man's head, and these are baked in pits.

Scene from "The Very Idea," at The Grand Next Wednesday Evening.

It would seem a difficult, not to say a perilous task, to construct a successful farce with eugenics as the central topic, yet this is what has been accomplished by Mr. William LeBaron in "The Very Idea," which is to be the attraction at The Grand on Wednesday next, Dec. 18.

The subject is a very weighty one, and important as well, and those who have given much thought are inclined to be pronounced in their views. Moreover, there is constant danger of overstepping conventionalities and thus giving offence to the sensative, but the author has been very guarded and amusing as well, and judging from the amount of laughter that greets the play it meets with popular approval.

ENGLISH RACES SHOULD UNITE

We Are the Ballast of the New Order.

JOHN GALSWORTHY SPEAKS

He Says that Britons and Yanks Must Work Together and Declares that If They Quarrel Civilization Will Probably Split Up Again and Go on Its Way to Ruin.

JOHN GALSWORTHY, in the Yale Review, says if we English-speaking races quarrel and become disunited, civilization will split up again and go its way to ruin. We are the ballast of the new order. I don't believe in formal alliances, or in grouping nations to exclude and keep down other nations. Friendships between countries should have the only true reality of common sentiment, and be animated by desire for the general warfare of mankind. We need no formal bonds, but we have a sacred charge in common, to let no petty matters, differences of manner, divergencies of material interest, destroy our spiritual agreement. Under the pressure of this war there is, beneath the lip-service we pay to democracy, a disposition to lose faith in it, because of its undoubted weakness and inconvenience in a struggle with states autocratically governed; there is even a sort of secret reaction to autocracy. On those lines there is no way out of future of bitter rivalries, chicanery and wars, and the probable total failure of our civilization. The only cure which I can see, lies in democratizing the whole world and removing the present weaknesses and shams of democracy by education of the individual conscience in every country. Good-bye to that chance, if Americans and Britons fall foul of each other, refuse to pool their thoughts and hopes, and to keep the general welfare of mankind in view. They have got to stand together, not in aggressive and jealous policies, but in defence and championship of the self-helpful, self-governing, "live and let live" philosophy of life.

SEEK TO SEPARATE JESS FROM $25,000

Jack Curley and Tom Jones Tell a Painful Tale in Voluminous Complaint Before Justice Lehman.

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—While Jess Willard was hibernating on his Western ranch, secure from the wintry blasts and meditating on his regal status as the crowned head of pugilism, those two intrepid promoters, "Jack" Curley and "Tom" Jones linked forces together here for the purpose of separating him from $25,000.

They appeared with their grievance against the champion before Justice Lehman, in the Supreme Court, and narrated a painful tale of when the doors to the exchequer were closed upon them. Having materially pushed "Big Jess" along the trail to fame which ended on a memorable day in Havana, with Johnson staring unblinkingly at the sun, the one-time managers believe their efforts have met with little appreciation on their protege's part.

In a voluminous complaint, "Jack" and "Tom" assert they contracted for the champion's services for three years for which they were to receive twenty per cent. of all moneys paid him for rogated the contract while there still exhibitions. Willard, it is charged, abremained three months to run, and they estimate this period to be worth to them about $25,000. Although the champion was a missing factor at the legal proceedings his interests are protected by counsel.

BOWL FOR YOUR TURKEYS

How Japan Discourages Betting on the Races

NEW YORK, Dec. 16.— G. F. T. Ryall writes in the World:

In Japan, it seems, they discourage betting on the races by encouraging it. The working of this paradox is truly Oriental, but by the same token it "would never do with us."

The system apparently is a ramification of this pari-mutuel with a decidedly Japanese twist. Admission to a race course is two yen (about $1 gold), and when the visitor pays his fee he gets two tickets, each of which is good for a one yen bet. In wagering the tickets are put in a box bearing the name of the horse he desired to back, and the backer retains a counter-foil.

Thus your Japanese racegoer, provided he can pick his first winner, can see the races for nothing and be on velvet for the day as well. But—

When he goes around to collect he does not get yens; he gets a chit on a store for whatever amount is due him.

The paying system is arranged alphabetically from A to H, the latter being the shortest price. How this works out with a field of more or less than eight horses, or if a fixed set of prices regardless of the play, deponeth knoweth not. However, when there are more than 500 yen on the winner he pays H and the only advantage the backer has, barring the satisfied feeling of seeing his choice roll down in front, comes in the form of an order on a store.

A man may bet as much as he likes at Japanese race course, but even if he picks all the winners he never gets any money back, no even his original stake. What is due him is paid off in vouchers on stores.

It often has been said that the pari-mutuel will make a piker of the biggest plunger, but the Japanese system goes the mutuels one better.

However, an afternoon at the races offer unlimited possibilities, for a "winner" may bring home anything from a suit of clothes, a new hat, a grand piano, a box of cigarettes, or a motor car to the week's supply of groceries.

One thing is certain, it eliminates that most hazardous of all—the last race. A "winner" always comes home with something.

No, one cannot put over a five-horse parle in Japan.

The meeting promoted by the Nippon Race Club at Yokohama are mostly for country breds, and Cup Day is the big day of the year when plate to the value of $250, presented by the Emperor, is run for.

The cup was presented this year, according to a letter to the Sportsman, by the Crown Prince, attended by a glittering array of officers, to the owner of the winner, a horse named Dorian.

Then, as is the custom, the friends of the owner received cards announcing that "Dorian requests the pleasure of your company at his stable after the races." To the stable was attached a little room where the delighted owner entertained his guests. This reminds one of the "at homes" that Willis Sharpe Kilmer's Sun Briar gave last New Year's Day.

PTE. W. M. POTTER IS AWARDED MILITARY MEDAL FOR HEROISM AT ARRAS.

OTTAWA, Dec. 16.— Mr. and Mrs. James S. Potter of this city, formerly of Montreal and Toronto, have been advised that their son, Pte. W. M. Potter of the 102nd Battalion, and formerly Captain and Adjutant of the 212th Battalion, Winnipeg, has been awarded the Military Medal for his heroism at the third battle of Arras, where he conducted a wounded man off the field under heavy shell fire, and also for his great work with the Machine Gun Corps.

Pte. Potter entered the 212th Battalian as a private, but within a very short time his ability was recognized and he was made a Lieutenant. His promotion to Captain followed shortly afterward, and he was later made Adjutant. Time and again he tried to get overseas, but was held back because his services were of so much value to his battalion. On one occasion a draft of 200 men shouted in unison for Capt. Potter to be allowed to go as their officer, but again his request was refused. Finally he resigned his commission and enlisted as a private with the 102nd Battalion.

Pte. Potter is well known in both Eastern and Western Canada. His father is one of the Executive heads of the Mission for Sailors in Canada, and his brother is Rev. J. G. Potter, MacVicar Memorial Church, Montreal, and formerly of Peterborough.

At life's banquet the scum is often mistaken for the cream.

Our respect for old age depends greatly on whether it be applied to men or women or the Thanksgiving turkey.

What it Takes to Keep Family of Five in Food

The general cost of living has not decreased since the armistice was signed. The cost of a weekly budget of food for a family of five in November of 1914 was $7.96, in November last it was $13.41. The tendency of the increase may be seen from the following figures. 1914, $7.96; 1915, $8.02; 1916, $9.81; 1917, $12.10; 1918, $13.41. The cost of fuel lighting and rent brought the budget up to $14.25 in 1914 and $21.41 in November 1918. It would therefore appear that sum of $85 per mouth is now required to keep an average family of five in necessitites of life but it must be pointed out that in these budgets very formidable items of clothing and boots and shoes are not included. For a family of five the purchase of these necessities especially in winter will add very greaty to the drain on the family pocket book. There are indications of slight decreases in certain commodities during the past month and when spring comes, experts predict there will be a considerable dropping off in the others But generally speaking during the winter no very appreciatable decrease is anticipated.

ENGLAND SELLING OFF ARMY HORSES

LONDON, Dec. 16. — The British Army is about to begin the disposal of three-quarters of a million horses. The loss of horses in 1915 was 14 1-2 per cent.; in 1916, 14 per cent., and in 1918, 27 per cent., an increase due to heavy fighting and night bombing.

As many horses as possible are to be sold in England. The army has ten thousand mules in England which the people do not want, buying mules being unpopular, although they are more economical than horses, as they eat less and suffer fifty per cent. less sickness.

The army has 100,000 horses and mules in Egypt which it will try to sell there, as transport is unavailable.

General Allenby reports that the people of Egypt, Syria and Palestine treat horses well. The sale in England will begin next week, 25,000 being offered, divided among many cities.

SEVERE EARTHQUAKE.

Shock Following Rumbling Observed at Victoria.

VICTORIA, B.C., Dec. 16.—Estevan Wireless Station reports a severe earthquake shock shortly after 5 o'clock Saturday afternoon, preceded by a rumbling noise. The shock was clearly recorded at the Dominion Observatory as having taken place at 5.09 o'clock, with a duration of three minutes, and a movement from northwest to south-east. F. Napier Dennison, Superintendent of the Observatory, estimated the distance of the point of origin from here as 180 miles.

AIRPLANE HITS HOTEL; TWO OF CREW KILLED, AND REMAINDER HURT.

NORFOLK, Va., Dec. 16. — A mail airplane en route from Washington to the Hamtpon Roads naval base, crashed into the roof of a hotel at Willoughby, near here, killing two of the five men aboard and injuring the other two.

ARMISTICE SIGNING CURED 2,000 U.S. MEN SUFFERING SHELL SHOCK

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—More than 2,000 American soldiers in France suffering from shell-shock were cured by news of the signing of the armistice, Surgeon-General Ireland told the Senate military committee. Out of 2,500 shell-shock patients, the general said, all except about 300 were well almost immediately.

RUSSIAN GENERALS AND MINISTER SHOT.

Victor of Prezemysl and Man blamed for Von Hindenburg Successes Put to Death.

STOCKHOLM. — Generals Russki and Dimitrieff, of the Russian army, have been shot by the order of the local Soviet at Proprapersk, according to an official Ukrainian statement from Petrograd. Mr. Rukhloff, formerly Minister of Commerce and Communication, was shot at the same time.

General Russki at the outbreak of the war commanded the Russian troops in Northern Poland. Some blame was attached to him for the success of Field Marshal Von Hindenburg.

General Radko Dimitrieff is a Bulgarian and played a prominent part in the Bulgarian campaign against the Turks in 1912. He commanded the Russian forces which captured Przemysl. Later he was commander of the Russians on the Riga front.

The delegation from the Russian Baltic provinces received a telegram yesterday reporting that the Esthonian front was still holding against the attack launched upon it by the Russian Bolsheviki. In the south the Bolsheviki have captured Neuhausen, west of Pskov. The delegation urges the necessity of sending help to the attacked front.

M'ADOO SAYS GOOD-BYE

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—Secretary McAdoo said good-bye to the Treasury officials and employees and introduced Carter Glass of Virginia, who becomes Secretary to-day. Several thousand men and women of the force gathered before the steps of the Treasury building for the ceremony. Mr. McAdoo made a short speech, thanking his associates for their co-operation, particularly during the strenuous past nineteen months, and the crowd cheered heartily.

ASK FOR LIVING WAGE.

BRANTFORD, Dec. 16. —To Premier Hearst the Equal Franchise Club of this city has sent a repetition of its request that women be enabled to sit in the Legislature and also that in the event of girls being employed on farms next summer a living wage and decent conditions be assigned them. The complaint was made here last summer that some of the girls did not receive enough even to pay their living expenses.

DESERTER IS GIVEN TERM OF TEN YEARS

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 16. — Sentences of four courts martial were promulgated before the Western Ontario Battalion last Thursday. Pte. Jas. Croft, guilty of desertion, was sentenced to 10 years' penal servitude; Pte. Colin Lawrence Young, guilty of a similar offence, was sentenced to seven years, while Pte. Harle Frankland Quick was sentenced to one year imprisonment. Pte. William George Murrell was given 90 days' detention.

LONDON, December 15. — Major-General Salmond, General Officer Commanding the Royal Air Forces in the Middle East, accompanied by Captain Ross Smith, has arrived t Karachi, on the Baluchistan border, and is in conference with the government of India regarding the establishment of an aerial route and service to India.

These two aviators have just completed a flight from Cairo to Karachi, a distance of 2,548 miles, in 36 hours actual flying time. Their route from Cairo was by way of Damascus, Bagdad, Bushire, Bandar, Abbas, Sarbaz and Karachi.

The machine utilized for this purpose had previously been flown from England to Egypt, and took an active part in the final operations against the Turks on the Palestine front. In its latest flight no effort was made against time for record-breaking purposes.

General Salmond will continue his journey by air to Delhi.

Voice of The People

To the Sporting Editor of the Examiner,—

Dear Sir,—Could this city not organize a "Mercantile League" for this season? With four or six factories each entering a team it would create quite a rivalry. This kind of league offers a good brand of hockey and it would assure plenty of games here this winter. Trusting you will give this your attention, and endeavour to arouse a little interest from the factories, for the immediate formation of a league. As a suggestion a meeting might be called at the Y.M.C.A. or any suitable place and those desirous of entering teams be asked to attend.

Yours,
"ONE INTERESTED."

Sir: What is Bolshevikism? A close study of it, at first and second hand, shows it to be the will of the people to take possession of the world for themselves. They have abandoned Religion, and the rights of property, and have gone back to the primeval state of man in barbarism, when he took what he could, and lived as he pleased. It is the opposite of Socialism which subordinates the individual to the State. But the contrast of doctrines between Bolshevikism and Socialism does not extend to Religion. Both claim that it is impossible to preach justice and excuse original sin, which as an inheritance forced upon posterity, it is not just to hold men accountable for. They will acknowledge their own sins but not those of Adam and Eve.

Then, the modern Bolshevist compares the sacrifice of Humanity with that of Christ, and finds that Humanity, as in the late war, has far surpassed the Christian's creed. What can be done with this modern infidelity? It is founded on argument—even on reason and fact. Formerly it lacked courage and force, but that time is gone. Religion depends on Revelation, on something wholly unknown to the natural man. It becomes therefore as between the two a mere matter of belief in the fact of revelation or in the facts of humanity. They do not agree, and cannot agree. It was because they were opposed that revelation was given.

One great branch of the religious world has deepened its mysticism and tightened its hold upon its followers. The other has gone more into sport, temperance, education and the affairs of the people, hoping to get possession of them in that way, and thus hold them from getting out of the hand of revelation. The frenzy of the extremists shows itself in Bolshevism, who will smash that which they cannot attack in any other way. We have Bolshevism everywhere. It is now attacking Socialism, but many confuse it with the latter.

The Prudential Staff Meeting

War-Stamp Saving Society Formed.

The annual staff meeting of the representatives of the Prudential Life Assurance Company for the district of Peterborough was held last week in the Prudential offices.

Mr. E. J. McIver, Newark, N.J., Supervisor of the Prudential Life, and Superintendent J. T. LeFevre of the Kingston district, were present. The meeting was held to arrange the regular December effort and to receive congratulations as to the proud position which Peterborough district obtained in 1918. Out of 1,000 superintendancies in the United States and Canada, the Peterborough district stands twentieth. Mr. J. T. Allen is the enterprising superintendent of this district.

A Feature.

Another interesting feature was the organization of a war stamp saving society in which every member pledged to purchase at least one stamp a month. The following officers of this new society were elected:

Chairman—Supt. J. I. Allen.
Secretary— Ass't Supt R. F. Sedgwick.
Treasurer— Ass't Supt. F. J. Flaherty.
Auditor—Miss Elsie Taylor, cashier.

The purpose of this society is not alone to purchase W.S.S. stamps, but to interest the public in their purchase.

620 Soldiers Secured Land

Have Taken Advantage of Settlement Plans Since July.

OTTAWA, December 15— In view of the large number of enquiries received by the Soldier Settlement Board from soldiers recently returned from the front, and others, in regards to the soldiers' land settlement scheme, the Soldiers' Settlement Board has issued the following explanatory statement:

The Soldiers' Settlement Act, 1917, was passed as an aid to returned soldiers in settling upon the land and to increase agricultural production of Canada. The Act applies to members of our expeditionary force who have left with an honourable record or who have been honorably discharged, also discharged members of the expeditionary forces of the United Kingdom and other British Dominions who saw actiev service at a seat of war, and to such members discharged from active service in the forces of our allies, who were British subjects resident in Canada before the war; it also applies to the widows of any such persons who died in active service.

The Act provides for loaning to those entitled to its benefits, on the security of a first charge of first mortgage against their land, amounts up to a maximum of $2,500. The uses to which such loaned money may be put are the acquiring of land for agricultural purposes, the payment of encumbrance against such land, the erection of farm buildings, and the purchase of stock, machinery and equipment. The amount of the loan in each case must be justified by the value of the security offered.

BOLSHEVIK MINISTER OF EDUCATION IS A FORMER WASHERWOMAN

(By George Renwick to Toronto Globe.)

AMSTERDAM, December 12. — One province of Germany is already fully in the power of the Bolsheviks. It is the Duchy of Brunswick, the Monarch of which was the first German prince to abdicate. The Bolshevik government which has been set up is certainly a curiosity. The president is a hunchback dwarf, of four feet and some inches in height. He was formerly a low class tailor, who proudly describes himself as an artistic maker of clothes. His salary is £3,500 per annum, and he has the foresight to insist that it be paid him in daily installments. He hails from the province of Hanover, and goes by the name off Merries. He appointed as the Minister of Education a washerwoman, the nefarious goings on in whose house used to call for the serious attention of the police. She apparently helps herself to what ready cash she can lay her hands on by the way of salary, and no one appears to object. Her only official act so far has been to appoint a servant girl, relative of the president, to the position of headmistress of the Brunswick Girls School. A turner from a local machine factory has had Bolshevik greatness thrust upon him by being appointed the Police President. In the Ducal Palace soldiers of the Red Guard, together with their wives, are housed.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE PETERBORO PROGRESSIVE CLUB

Society Concludes Another Year of Activity—Aid for the Boys at the Front—Financial Report for the Year.

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Progressive Club was held on Wednesday, 16th of October, 1918. The following reports were read and adopted:

At a meeting of the Club held on October 3rd, 1917, it was decided to send $25.00 to the Canadian Field Comforts Commission to forward Christmas presents for the men in the trenches. During the year two Jumnage Sales were held, which included fancy work tables; refreshments were also served. Through the kindness of Mr. P. J. Kenny and Mr. J. D. Lundy, who loaned us the stores, we had successful sales. At a meeting held on Jan. 23rd, 1918, the sofa donated by Mrs. Hazen Ritchie was drawn for; the winner was Mrs. J. Bell, Albert street. The Tag Day held on June 1st, 1918, was very successful, the amount realized being $713.97. The members and friends were generous in helping and thanks are due to a number of war veterans who assisted. On June 19th, a cap donated by Mrs. Richard was drawn for, the winner being Mrs. Hogg. Mrs. Holmes was good enough to again offer the Club her house and grounds for a garden party which was held on the 1st of August. The 57th Band was kind enough to come and give selections which added greatly to the enjoyment of the evening.

During the year we have sent away 2 bales, 7 to the Canadian Field Comforts Commission and 5 to Moore Barrack's Hospital. We have also done some sewing for the Red Cross Society, consisting of 162 pillow slips, 3 pyjamas, 34 sheets, and 67 towels.

Interesting Address.

On Friday, August 23rd, Lieut. Joan Arnoldi gave a very interesting address on the work of the Canadian Field Comforts Commission. She had been in the work since the beginning of the war so was able to give a great deal of information in regard to it. She particularly stated that the growth of the work must keep pace with the growth of the army.

On Feb. 16, 1918, we received from the Government a certificate of registration which made our Club a chartered society.

On Saturday, Sept. 14th, at the Exhibition Grounds, a drawing was held for a mare and colt, donated to the Club by Dr. Robinson, the proceeds to go to the Prisoners of War Fund. The winner was Mr. D. H. Smith, of Ida. The drawing of the winning ticket was made by Dr. Sinclair.

Dr. Robinson has been a good friend of the Progressive Club, having twice donated a horse at which a considerable sum was realized. We are also deeply indebted to Mr. H. C. Winch for his great generosity in caring for the animals for so many months free of charge. In fact without his help it would have been quite impossible for the Club to have accepted the gifts from Dr. Robinson, and it was only because Mr. Winch kindly kept them so long that the Club was able to add so largely to the treasure's account. The Club has had very kind friends who have helped in so many ways and they wish to thank them all for the help they have given.

At the meeting held October 16th, it was decided to send to the Secour National $110.00 for the support of a French orphan for one year. Also $50.00 to the Canadian Field Comforts Commission and $10.00 to the Thursday Club to aid them in their work for the Navy League. The Club also decided to send comfort bags to the Sailors at Halifax.

All the officers for the ensuing year were returned by acclamation.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

MARY ROSE,
Secretary P. P. Club.

U.S. GASES WOULD HAVE SMOTHERED GERMANY'S ARMIES

General Sibert Reveals Colossal Scale of Preparation for Chemical Warfare.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 16. — Secrets of America's preparation for the waging of chemical warfare, revealed here by Major William L. Sibert, at a dinner given by the commissioned personnel of the Chemical Warfare Service, shows how wisely Germany acted in acknowledging defeat. General Sibert says the fortresses of Metz would have been "smothered in gas" and that the Germans would have "learned something about gas" they never dreamed of when they inaugurated this form of warfare.

America alone would have had ten tons of "mustard" gas to Germany's one, and in addition to that this country had something new in the way of gas that would have given Germany the surprise of her life.

General Sibert says the war has developed the inventive genius of America in the line of chemistry, and that here after this country will lead the world. He summed up the accomplishments of the service as follows

Deluge of Toxic Substances.

"The chemical warfare service came into existence as such July 13, 1918, by Executive order, and is therefore one of the newest services of the War Department. Notwithstanding this fact, when the armistice was signed, this service was in a position to perform its full function at least as effectively as that of any other bureau of the War Department. This function was to manufacture gas, load it into shells, devise additional appliances for delivering it, and to provide defensive appliances for protection of the troops against similar devices on the part of the enemy.

"On November 11 plants for the manufacture of the standard gas were in operation with a manufacturing capacity greater than that of England and France combined, which capacity would have been trebled in the case of certain gases before the beginning of the new year. Had the war continued until the spring of 1919 it would have subjected the German to a deluge of toxic substances such as he never dreamed possible when he commenced this type of warfare.

"It was recognized that the soldier must do a large part of his fighting in a gas mask and that a fighting gas mask must be developed, one without a mouthpiece or nose clip and one in which the eye pieces would not dim. This type of mask was just coming into production, and about 400,000 of them had been made when hostilities ceased.

Fertile Field for Capital.

The results obtained by this country during the war proved that the backwardness on the part of the United States was not due to lack of ability in our chemists, but because the capitalists had found a more alluring field for their money than in the chemical direction.

"This war has shown that chemical engineering is the greatest undeveloped field of industry in the United states, and no nation can afford to permit such great possibilities to lie fallow. Our colleges, therefore, should make a specialty of chemical engineering and our Congress should see the necessity of making the country independent of any other nation in essential chemical matters."

Accused of Killing His Newly-Wed Wife

Michigan Insurance Agent is Arrested in Hamilton—Sought For Two Years.

MUSKEGON, Mich., Dec. 16. — Charged with slaying his newly-wed wife at the end of a wedding tour which included several Southern States, so that his first wife and their young daughter would know nothing of his bigamy, Milo H. Piper, aged thirty-six, a local insurance agent, was arrested at Hamilton, Ont., yesterday afternoon. He was willing to waive any legal formalities and was brought back here, arriving this morning.

The girl wife slain was Freida Weichman, whom Piper is said to have married at Crown Point, Ind., in the spring of 1916. Early in September of the same year section hands on the Grand Trunk Ry. near Crown Point came upon a freshly turned grave. With shovels they uncovered the body of a girl, which was later identified as that of Miss Weichman.

Search was at once made for Piper, but he had disappeared, and until he was located at Hamilton, no trace of him has been had during the past two years.

Piper told the officers here a story to the effect that a "mysterious man" had induced Miss Weichman to leave him, and that he believed this man was responsible for her death. As yet he has not been able to satisfactorily account for his absence since 1916.

Anniversary Services Held in Knox Church Yesterday

Principal Gandier, of Toronto, Preached at Both Services—The Challenge of the Present Crisis.

At the anniversary services held at Knox Presbyterian Church yesterday Principal Gandier D.D., of Toronto, preached both morning and evening. In the morning he took as his subject, "The Challenge of the present crisis to the Church of Jesus Christ". His text was: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make His paths straight".—Matthew 3, 3.

"For Israel the coming of the Lord meant the breaking up of the old order or complete dissolution and ruin. Because they did not prepare the way of the Lord it meant ruin."

Dr. Gandier spoke of the magnitude of the atrocities committed in the great world war which has just come to an end. He said that because of this spirit of antagonism, greed and lust for war the Christian Church had failed. Technical training, education, science, commerce, international socialism and international law also failed but we hoped for better from the Christian church. If one tenth of the number of men that have engaged in this present conflict had gone out with the love of Christ in their hearts instead of war, we would now have a spirit of love and brotherhood. The failure of the organized church is a challenge to all churches to break the bonds of sectionalism and ecclesiasticism for a broader view. The reconstruction of the society of the world is a challenge to the church to reach out to international relationships. God is giving us another chance. I don't believe that this war was of God. Lust of pleasure, wealth and power permeated the world before the war. God has put the future leadership of the world into the hands of the English speaking peoples. The war has resulted in the liberation of the Holy Land from the hated Mussulman yoke, and the overthrow of autocracy. As President Wilson says we've made the world safe for democracy. But what kind of democracy? Of what value is it that we set peoples free who are so brutish and ignorant that they can't govern themselves. I am afraid that this democracy has come too quickly. The whole world has to be Christianized Wouldn't it be wonderful if we could say that Canada was completely Christianized. We must Christianize the Orient completely. I say that if we do not Christianize that yellow nation of 500,000,000 souls an anti Christ will rise up among them and plunge the world into another great war. We must Christianize the Orient and indeed the whole world.

Music & Drama

THE MAN THEY LEFT BEHIND.

"The Man they Left Behind," at the Grand on Saturday, proved an exciting drama built around the same idea that furnished the key-note for Albert Brown's play, "The White Feather." Like the latter play, the hero of Saturday's attraction, is mistaken by all his friends for a slacker and a pacifist becauses he refuses to enlist, when in reality he is a secret service agent who has done wonderful work in rounding up German spies in the United States. As in the Brown play, there is a German espionage plot to foil and the hero emerges triumphantly, capturing the chief spy and vindicating himself in the eyes of his friends. While not approaching "The White Feather standard in general excellence, "The Man they left behind" was full of interest and excitement and was very well acted by a cast which included a number of members of the company which presented the comedy "In Walked Jimmy," here last season. Walter S. Howe gave an excellent account of himself as the misguided Sanford Raymond, and Ruby Davis, in the ingenue role of Frances Raymond, did some clever work. Jean Clarendon, who will be remembered as the Japanese doctor in "The Daughter of the Sun," last year, was the German spy in Saturday's offering.

VIOLA DANA

VIOLA DANA INTERPRETS MYRTLE REED ROMANCE

Metro Play, Starring Famous Actress Will be the Attraction at the Grand To-day and To-morrow

"Flower of the Dusk," the charming romantic play, adapted from the novel of the noted authoress, Myrtle Reed ,will be the feature at the Grand theatre with the charming little star, Viola Dana, as the heroine.

The story shows the beautiful love a young girl has for her blind father—whose "flower of dusk" she is. To keep him in ignorance of their poverty she does fine needlework and so supplies him with the many little luxuries to which he has always been accustomed. To what lengths the devotion of this little lame girl goes in her love and sacrifice for her beloved father, and of his lasting love for his dead wife, the charming play shows with powerful intensity.

Then comes the fragrant romance of the young lovers—brought up together from childhood but only gradually realizing the great love that is dawning for them. The story is one of heart-compelling pathos but is, at the same time, full of dramatic intensity for which the pen of Myrtle Reed is famous. The cast of players supporting Miss Dana is a noted one and includes such names as Guy Coombs, Howard Hall, Jack McGowan, Alice Martin, Bliss Milford, Margaret McWade, Augustus Philips, Eleanor Hickman, Charles Sutton Maggie Breyer, and Mrs. L. Ford.

John H. Collins, who directed Miss Dana in "Blue Jeans," and many of her celebrated successes, is responsible for the scenario and direction of his newest Dana triumph.

Duval and Lee in "Caught by Surprise" will be the vaudeville attraction for to-day and to-morrow.

Horse Romped Through the Park

The Result Proved Disastrous to the Vehicle to Which It Was Attached.

At noon to-day a horse belonging to a local livery stable ran way and badly damaged the buggy. Both of the shafts were broken and the front axle broken near the right-hand wheel.

The horse had been tied in the lane at the rear of the post office, where it was waiting for the mail for Rural Route 11. Mr. A. R. Ross, a postman, was in charge of the outfit. In some unknown manner the horse broke loose and dashing up the lane turned onto Brock street, thence into Victoria Park, where the buggy hitting a tree brought the vehicle to a standstill with disastrous results.

The horse escaped unscatched.

New Toronto Man Searched for His Money by Bandits.

TORONTO, December 16. — Constable W. J. Meyers, of New Toronto, while acting under general orders to watch for the bandits who on Friday held up a rural mail delivery man in Scarboro township, discovered on Saturday that Mr. G. Kelly of New Toronto, had been held up on Wednesday night by apparently the same men. Kelly was returning home when he was stopped by three masked men, who hurriedly ransacked his pockets and then made off. He took it for a joke at first and it was not until he had heard of the hold-up in Scarboro that he informed the authorities.

HICKEY'S SALE STILL SCORING

Saturday's downpour of rain put a rather wet blanket on the lively Hickey Sale, which has been having such a successful run during the past two weeks. The sales were not discouraging, but they fell short of what they would have been had "Probs" arranged for clear skies. The stock is still heavy and brimful of bargains in fashionable attire for men, including practical Christmas gifts. Santa Claus shoppers, ladies especially, will find some of the best of the goods to select from all this week. Watch for further particulars to-morrow. 1d

Soon Resurrected—Parents who have been unable to secure houses on account of size of their families might follow the example of one Toronto woman. She has nine children, and with such a handicap found it impossible to persuade any landlord to rent his house. She was a scrupulous woman, but was becoming desperate. She asked a neighbour if she would take eight of the children for a walk to the cemetery, and taking only the youngest child with her, set off to try another landlord. "How many children have you?" came the inevitable query. "Nine," she replied, "but eight are in the cemetery. She got the house, but had to do some explaining later.

The Essence of Emptiness

Some one has said:—"There is nothing quite so empty as an empty stocking at Christmas."

We're certainly doing our best to fill them. True, our motives may not be entirely disinterested; but, all the same, there'll be more joy on Christmas morning on account of our service.

Come in and see the wide range of these joy producers.

ALL HOPE ABANDONED.

Capt. Leclerc Returns From Vain Search for French Trawlers.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Mich., Dec. 16.—All hope that the two missing French mine sweepers, Cerisoles and Inkerman, had escaped the storm of November 24, when they became separated from the Sebastopol, a third vessel of the fleet, which was en route from Fort William to France, was abandoned Saturday night by Captain M. Leclerc, who has returned from an exhaustive search of the north shore of Lake Superior.

No trace of the vessels, which carried 76 men, was found. Captain Leclerc said. All of the victims were French, sailors but the two pilots. Captain Leclerc will leave here today with the Sebastopol in an effort to reach the Atlantic before the St. Lawrence River is closed by ice.

GRAIN MARKET

Cash corn was one to two cents lower at Chicago and St. Louis yesterday, these markets being still influenced by the Government's bearish report issued last week. The local market continues very quiet here, though corn of the old crop is offering freely, but very little demand at the present high prices. A little of the new crop is beginning to arrive here. Oats were again considerably weaker, C.W.'s offering at 2c. lower at Fort William. Ontario cash oats unchanged.

CATTLE MARKET

Union Stock Yards— Receipts, 301 cars, with 5,147 head of cattle, 185 calves, 2,578 hogs, and 2,742 sheep and lambs.

Trade was extremely slow yeterday. The large packing houses have bought very heavily the past week or two, and must by now be very well supplied with beef sufficient for requirements for the Christmas trade. At all events that was the interpretation put upon the general attitude of the buyers yesterday, several of whom were not operating in the market at all. A few offerings of real choice Christmas cattle were in the market, and these weer taken care of by the packers at good prices, several lots selling around $14, and one choice steer at $16. But for the general run of the day's offering the comparatively small number of transactions showed a decline of 40c. to 50c.

THE WIFE

BY JANE PHELPS

Ruth is Much Happier Now That Rachel is With Her.

CHAPTER LXV

To Ruth, having Rachel with her would have been unalloyed joy had it not been for the fact that her aunt had not yet forgiven her for disgracing the family name by going to work.

"She sholy was mad wid yo when she got dat letter, missy Ruth. She a'most upset the hul house, she did."

"But Rachel, what difference does it make whether I wash dishes and scrub, here at home, or earn the money somewhere else to pay you to do it?"

"It don' make no difference to Rachel, honey." She was proud that Ruth could work in the shop. Ruth could work in the shop. Ruth had taken her down with her, one morning, just to let her see what a nice place it was. "But yo aun't am a mos partikler woman. They ain't none of her folkes ever worked."

Ruth had written several letters to her aunt. At first she tried to make her understand how she felt about things; that she hated housework and was happy in the decorating. But Mrs. Clayborne had remained so obdurate, she had so insistently declared Ruth was disgracing her, that now she scarcely mentioned her work at all. Just wrote bright breezy letters telling of her new friends,—the Roberts'—of where she went, what she was reading, etc.

"I just long to tell her all about my work," Ruth said to Clara Roberts one day, "but it only makes her angry, so I keep still."

"I can't understand it!" Clara had sympathetically replied. The idea of thinking it was lowering to take a position outside the home was to her really funny.

"Aunt is very aristocratic."

"Yes, but scrubbing and washing dishes are not. I know, don't I do both?"

"But unless you told it, no one would know. I really believe aunt would lock the door and work nights rather than let anyone know she did anything. Yet she is so sensible in every other way. It's the way a good many southern people feel. They've always had so many niggers to wait on them, they have some reason for feeling as they do I guess."

"If she could only see the lovely place you work, I think she would be more reconciled."

"I've thought that, too. It's one reason I have urged her so hard to come and visit me. And Mr. Mandel is so nice to me. He has raised me twice since I have been with him—without my asking for it either."

"You are a wonder! I tell Kenyon that I'd give everything if I were only half as clever. I am goood for nothing but just a housekeeper."

But you like it, and I loathe doing it. That's the difference. If I had cared for housekeeping I probably never should have looked for a position. Yet in many ways we are better off because I did. Then too, I can have Rachel because of it."

"She's a dear."

"Isn't she I love her dearly, and hope now to keep her always."

Ruth meant it. Now that she had Rachel with her, it seemed like a bit of her old plantation life come to her. Now she was eagerly welcomed when she arrived home, was petted and made much of.

"Is'e yo tired, honey?" would be Rachel's greeting ,then she would unfasten Ruth's shoes, and draw her bath just as she used to do in the time which had seemed so long ago, but which now Ruth declared had not been any time at all.

"I just shut my eyes, Mammy, and it seems that I never have been away from you. Sometimes I think I am a little girl again, and you are taking care of me just as you used to."

"Yo ain't nothin but a chile, yo ain't, ef yo is mar'd."

"Oh, yes I am! but I like to be a baby to you, Rachel."

Often after some such conversation Rachel would grumble to herself: "Tain't no use talkin' Master Brian don mak 'nough of her, he don. I has to mak up to her, I does."

Ruth had told Brian that she was to receive ten dollars a week more. That Mr. Mandel had said she earned it.

"I do, too." she had added.

"I suppose you think you are worked to death." he had said, scowling.

"In my work it is the knowing what must be done that they pay people for Brian. After I—or someone else—have figured out just what a house or a room needs, almost anyone can carry out our orders."

"He'll be making you one of the firm, next." He was beginning to sulk and to show his jealousy.

"I hope so!" Ruth laughed. Then she added, "Come on, let's get dressed and go somewhere. We'll just use the firt ten having a good time together. Perhaps it will bring us luck if we do."

"Us! I can't see but you are lucky enough. That is in all but the man you married."

"That was the very luckiest thing I ever did." she replied, then hurried him off to dress. Yet, in spite of her gay manner, she felt depressed by his reception of her news.

To-morrow—Brian Takes Mollie To The Matinee. Ruth is There Also.

War Puzzles Eskimos

OVER four years of war enabled the neutral nations of America, Asia, and Africa to form their verdict; and even those of Europe, though they were too close to the fire to allow their opinions to become known when they could help it. And now there has reached us the views of the last neutral nation to be heard from—the Eskimos of Northern Greenland, a report of whose opinions has just been brought back by Donald M. MacMillan, the explorer.

The Eskimos think that the white men have gone piblokto—which, in the white man's language, means that they are crazy; that they are running amuck; that they have gone off their collective nut. And in view of the amiably communistic civilization, informed by brotherly love, which MacMillan describes, it is not altogether surprising that they find the intricacies of international rivalries a little too hard for them, and comprehension of the German idea entirely hopeless.

MacMillan started north in July, 1913, and before the end of summer established his headquarters at Etah, the metropolis of Northwestern Greenland—a settlement consisting, under normal conditions, of four families, each housed in an igloo of rocks and ice, half buried in the ground. He was at Etah when the war broke out, but mail doesn't reach the Far North very often, and it was the late spring of 1915, when the war was already nearly a year old—when Americans were waiting for the answer to the first Lusitania note, when the Germans were driving the Russians backward through Galicia—that he first learned of the disappearance of the world that he had known.

It was Peter Freuchen, the Danish trader at North Star Bay, 120 miles south of Etah, who brought him the news. By the first boat that pushed its way northward through the breaking ice and then by overland sledge, Freuchen received letters from friends back in Denmark which told of all that had happened since the previous summer; and as soon as he had read them he hitched up his dog team and started northward by sledge to break the news to MacMillan. Freuchen found the American explorer and his colleagues, and as they put their eager heads together around a lamp he translated slowly from the Danish the story of the first nine months of war.

Naturally, the effect of the big news on the party was not lost on their Eskimo neighbors, who wanted to know what was the matter. It took some time to explain it to them, for while they know what it means to fight with animals, the idea of men, organized in large bodies, setting out to kill one another was something unheard of in the frozen north. And when at last it was made plain to them that tribes of white men, more numerous than any tribes of Eskimo, were actually doing this, that cities larger than Etah, though considerably less fireproof, were being given to the flames, it was their unanimous judgment that the white men had gone piblokto. Why should anybody fight?

Well, MacMillan explained, there was one tribe of white men known as the Germans who wanted more land, and because the tribes around them would not give it to them they set forth to burn and kill. But this elucidation was anything but satisfactory. Why in the world, reasoned the Eskimo sages, should anybody fight about land? There was plenty of land for everybody, they remarked, looking out over the limitless expanse of Northern Greenland and on to the far northwest toward the blank spot on the map. What use was land, anyway? There had to be a little bit of it to build igloos on; there had to be a little more to enable animals useful to man to get their sustenance, but beyond these minimum requirements, land was a superfluous obstruction to the view. As for fighting for it, nobody but madmen would do that.

Attempts to expound to them the question of governmental differences and the nature of objectionable autocracy were equally futile. The nearest analogue to a Kaiser that can be found in the vicinity of Etah is the angekok, or medicine man, who is the only person in any tribe having any authority. Even he hasn't much; he occupies a position of some friendliness with the religious powers that surround the Eskimo community, but if he attempts to impress his opinions on the others of the tribe in a way that seems to them objectionable they get together and without any rancor stick the angekok in the back with a harpoon. A new medicine man is then chosen who, with the example of his predecessor in mind, is usually of a modest and retiring disposition. The idea that there could be a Kaiser-angekok in any tribe who, whether because of exceptional friendliness with the hovering spirits, or for any other reason, had so much power that his fellow-citizens could not remove him by a regretful jab of the harpoon failed to percolate through the Eskimo skull.

Economic warfare was likewise to them a thing unknown.

New Gift to France.

On behalf of the Canadian Red Cross Society the following cable has been sent to M. Poincare, President of France, by the chairman of the Central Council: "I have the honor to inform you that the Canadian Red Cross Society desires you to accept gift of £50,000, which sum they wish you to have expended for the benefit of the refugee men, women and children of France. The funds are being cabled to our commissioner in London with instructions to forward to you."

"AMONG THE MISSING."

Mystery of Rosey, Company E's Pet Pig.

This is the sad tale of Rosey of company E and how she came to be entered on the casualty list of the regiment as "missing." The captain vouches for it, and who could be more truthful than the captain?

Rosey is—or must we say was?—the most charming little wild pig imaginable. Her French name is "sanglier" and she dwelt in the forest, rooting at peace and dreamed of acorns and young sprouts. Then one day a strange company of Canadian forestry engineers invaded the forest and Rosey's life path turned to slop buckets and other undreamed of delicacies.

Rosey and four little brothers and sisters, when captured one day, took the fancy of the cook of company E. Do not think that because he was a cook he had no heart! He desired Rosey's company, not her carcass. He set about training the five, but four of them couldn't seem to learn Canadian ways and soon departed this life. But Rosey learned and lived. She grew tall and plump and loved the cook like a father—so the captain says. She trotted cheerfully about the camp, never missed a mealtime and learned to follow the cook about like a dog.

Company E has a big heart, and Rosey was not its only darling. Among the pets they loved and lost were one deer—they thought they had it tamed, but one day some one yelled, and it skipped to the woods and was never seen again — eight dogs, including two "escargot hounds," savage little youngsters whose delight it was to hunt snails; one fox, which they couldn't tame at all, a number of Belgian hares and three baby wildcats.

One morning Rosey, now several months old and strong as her kind, was having a friendly wrestling match with one of the dairy maidens. The cat scratched her a bit too hard and Rosey closed her jaws. Company E buried the remains.

Even this did not seriously impair Rosey's popularity As she grew in wisdom the cook's affection for her grew also, and he took her wherever he went.

One day the tragedy occurred. Cook was strolling down the road, chatting with a friend and not paying much attention to Rosey, who was on ahead, nosing for acorns. Suddenly a car whizzed past, then slowed up and stopped. Some one in khaki got out swiftly, seized the unsuspecting Rosey in his arms—Rosey was friendly with every one and made no objection—whisked into the car and was gone.

The cook ran after the car, shrieking imprecations, but no one heard him. So Rosey was lost.

But—and this has almost led the cook to mutiny—the car bore the American general staff. They couldn't just see who was in, but the cook feels that for a general to abduct in this improper manner the darling of an enlisted man—and she with a bell around her neck so that any one could tell she was somebody's pet—is taking an altogether unfair advantage of his military position. The captain, even if he is an officer, sides with the cook.

They've offered five francs reward for her return and the cook has spent two twenty-four hour leaves riding about the countryside on a bicycle looking for her. But Rosey is still "missing" and there is mourning in company F.

STANDS A LEPER AMONG NATIONS

People Will Refuse to Deal With Germany.

CANADA CANNOT FORGET

There Is a Movement to Spread the Same Sentiment Throughout the United States and People of That Country Are Registering "Silent Oaths" That They Will Not Buy Anything Made In Germany.

NOW that the war is over the question of renewed relationship with the Germans will be coming again before the public. There can be no doubt that it will take the world a long time to forget the unspeakable crimes committed by the Germans, who seem to have exhausted evil in their efforts to win the war. On this continent the sentiment is largely against any renewal of friendship with the Hun. Here in Canada, where we have a death list of over 50,000 men out of a population of less than 8,000,000, there is hardly a citizen who has not lost some dear one in the war. We are not likely to forget in a hurry. Some people ask if it is not possible that the resentment will soon pass in the United States, where a death list of 25,000 out of 100,000,000 has not hit so many people proportionately. As a matter of fact, the Americans are organizing themselves to resist the return of German domination, which had been growing there before the war. Over a year ago, William Atherton Du Pay, an author and magazine writer living in Washington, began to use as a final paragraph in every letter he wrote the following pledge: "I swear so long as I live never knowingly to buy anything made in Germany." He found instant approval and appreciation of the slogan, many of his correspondents immediately spreading the idea by using it themselves. The idea in many forms has spread over many parts of the United States, and it is now a regular slogan. More frequently a poem by Kenneth Graham Duffield has been widely circulated. It is entitled "My Oath," and it registers a vow never to deal with the Germans again. A shortened version of Mr Duffield's poem is known to Canadians, and four verses may be quoted to indicate that the United States, as well as Canada, will long refuse to shake the blood-dripping hand of Germany,—

WILLIAM A. DU PUY.

I will not trade with a German shop,
That lives by the German hand.
I'll use no drug with a German name,
That's grown on German land.

I will not take a German's word,
He'll break it if He can.
There is no love in a German's heart,
Or faith in a German man.

I'll not forget those awful deeds,
To girls and little boys,
No more I'll hang on Christmas trees,
Those blood-stained German toys.

This is my oath when war is done
I'll swear to keep it true.
And since I know you feel the same
I ask this oath of you.

Took Severe Cold ON HIS LUNGS

COUGHED PHLEGM and BLOOD.

On the first appearance of a cough or cold, do not neglect it, but get rid of it at once before it has a chance to grow worse, and gets settled on the lungs, causing bronchitis, pneumonia and other serious lung troubles.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup will cure the cough or cold on its first inception and perhaps save you years of suffering.

Mr. G. F. Stratychuk, Canora, Sask., writes: "Last winter I took a most severe cold on my lungs and was coughing up phlegm and blood most of the time. I had the cough for over two months, and took a great deal of different medicines, but found no relief from them. At last a friend advised me to take Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, which I did, and it gave me great relief in a very short time, and to-day I am enjoying good health again."

The marvellous results that Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup has achieved in its cures of coughs and colds has caused many so-called "pine" preparations to be put on the market, which do not contain any pine whatever. See that you get the genuine when you ask for it.

Put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25c and 50c. Manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Bank Deposits.

Savings deposits in Canadian banks have increased by another twenty-two million dollars. During September they reached a new high level with a total of $1,037,498,920. At the end of August they were $1,014,711,865, a figure which then constituted a record. Curiously, the increase during August was also approximately twenty-two million dollars. The September returns also show an increase in bank circulation and an increase in demand deposits. Current loans, both in and outside Canada are higher as compared with the previous month.

Got Bear In Back Yard.

Mrs. Harvey Black, of Campbell's Bay, while hanging out clothes in her back yard a few days ago was accosted by a bear that had never been properly introduced. She seized a club and launched a counter-offensive, whereupon the bear treed. Reinforcements arriving in the form of Mr. Black and a rifle, bear steak was on the dinner menu a few hours later.

Fliverous Pastimes.

These fliverous pastimes are listed by the Boston Transcript: Spinning a one-man top, chasing a running board, listening to the sparking plug, eating off a license plate, arguing with a crank, knitting a hood for a tin Lizzie.

LOOK AT A CHILD'S TONGUE WHEN CROSS, FEVERISH AND SICK

Takes no chances! Move poisons from liver and bowels at once.

Mothers can rest easy after giving "California Syrup of Figs," because in a few hours all the clogged-up waste, sour bile and fermenting food gently moves out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, and they become tightly packed, liver gets sluggish and stomach disordered.

When cross, feverish, restless, see if tongue is coated, then give this delicious "fruit laxative." Children love it, and it can not cause injury. No difference what ails your little one—if full of cold, or a sore throat, diarrhoea, stomach-ache, bad breath, remember, a gentle "inside cleansing" should always be the first treatment given. Full directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups are printed on each bottle.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," then look carefully and see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." We make no smaller size. Hand back with contempt any other fig syrup.

A Loyal Town Crier.

Ross, in Herefordshire, still boasts a town crier who latterly has been ending his announcements with the words: "God Save King George the Fifth, Emperor of India, Defender of the Faith and of the Empire; send victory to all his allies, with utter confusion to his enemies—and to the bottomless pit with the Kaiser and all his weary Willies!" Others might use stronger terms about the Kaiser, but the Town Council has decided that the benediction must be eliminated.

Case of Spiter Spitten.

Every one has heard the old story of the bitter bitten. In Kitchener recently Frank von Neubroun protested to the Board of Health against the lax enforcement of the prohibition against spitting on the streets. The board requested more diligence on the part of the police and von Neubroun was the first man apprehended. He himself is a member of the Board of Health.

VALUE OF INDEMNITY

W. T. R. PRESTON SAYS GERMANY SHOULD PAY.

Pamphlet Has Been Issued in Which Well-known Public Man Takes the Stand that Canada Has a Right to Ask Teutonic Nations to Pay Our Losses In the Great War.

IN a pamphlet entitled "Shall Germany Pay a War Indemnity to Canada?" Mr. W. T. R. Preston says:

No more important and far-reaching question has arisen in the Dominion during the fifty years that have elapsed since the scattered provinces became united under a federal system of Government than is contained in the inquiry, "Shall Canada claim a war indemnity?"

The cost of the war to the Dominion of Canada by the time demobilization is completed will be not less than $1,500,000,000.

The loss of population, including killed, missing, remaining abroad, and those rendered ineffective as wage-earners, will likely exceed 250,000.

The expenditure for pensions, calculating 250,000 who will have been physically disabled, or health so seriously affected their earning power is lessened, and the dependents of the killed who must be amply provided for, will call for probably $50,000,000 annually.

Every dollar of this expenditure must be claimed and paid by Germany.

It may be said that Germany is incapacitated from paying a war indemnity because of the obligations due in enormous domestic loans to carry on the war. That aspect of the case is altogether of secondary consideration. Germans who remained at home, who supplied the finances to carry on hostilities, who profiteered by the huge war expenditures, and who gambled upon Germany's chances to place its iron heel on the civilization of the world, have the second claim, not the first, on the German exchequer. They are particeps criminus in the national crimes. They cannot be relieved of their responsibility. Upon this unanswerable contention the allied belligerents or forces, not recompensed by territorial acquisitions, must be admitted to have the first claim upon the financial resources of the German nation for full and complete monetary consideration, and this is the position occupied by Canada.

Had it been decreed that the war should have any other ending than our victory, Canada would not have regretted its superhuman efforts in this fight for the freedom of the world. We would have paid our share of the indemnity which Germany gave the world notice would be insisted upon, and although heavily burdened, we should in time work out our national salvation.

Canada is one of the Allied combatants—sixty thousand of her sons lie buried in France and Flanders as evidence of the national courage and valour. There are no territorial possessions which the Dominion aspires to acquire. A monetary indemnification is the only possible recompense to meet the just rights of the Dominion. By no possibility could Canada have avoided assuming the responsibility of engaging in the great conflict, nor has the country the remotest desire to shirk this responsibility.

Germany forced this war—therefore Germany must pay. Germany alone with a population of sixty millions is better able to pay $2,500,000,000 in addition to all other claims, than this country, with a population of eight millions, can bear such a burden. I am not calling for vengeance, but demand justice.

Look for a moment to what the payment of this indemnity to Canada will mean for the future of this country, and we cannot deny our responsibility as to the heritage we shall leave to posterity.

In the first place the country will be in a position immediately to make liberal and ample provision for the dependents of those who have made the great sacrifice, and also adequately pension those veterans who will be entitled to consideration in this form when they return from overseas.

And the national treasury will be able to render the assistance which is so material in the reconstruction period following the war. With resources of that nature much of the otherwise commercial depression and catastrophe which is the invariable aftermath of war may be avoided.

The general effect of such a settlement of the Dominion's war liabilities upon every character of Canadian securities, including all war bond issues, would be to make them among the most valuable investments in the world, and would result in a stream of foreign capital flowing to this country, assisting in its development, such as has never yet been witnessed.

In addition to these specific advantages, the public treasury will have the cash with which to inaugurate government transport facilities to the great markets of the world overseas for the natural products of this country, freeing the producing public from the extortionate rates of steamship combines and companies, thus placing annually in the pockets of the toilers of this land millions of dollars that now go to swell the dividends of wealthy corporations.

Canada will also be in a position to erect warehouses and cold storage accommodation for all kinds of perishable commodities in Europe, and these natural products could be released and placed upon the markets at the proper time, instead of the forced sales to trade rings and combines of buyers as was so frequently the case before the war.

This is the situation that will be created by Germany being compelled to make just restitution to this Dominion.

GALLANT YOUTH DEAD.

Lieut. Ian A. McLeod Was the Youngest V. C.

Canada's—perhaps the Empire's—youngest Victoria Cross winner is dead from influenza in Winnipeg. This gallant youth is Lieut. Ian A. McLeod, R.A.F., of Stonewall, Man. Early in October Lieut. McLeod returned from England accompanied by his father, Dr. McLeod, who had gone overseas in the spring to be with his son, who then lay critically wounded in London.

Lieut. McLeod won the V.C. last April, when 18 years of age, after less than one year in the air service, part of his training having been received in Toronto. He won the V.C. when, whilst flying with an observer and attacking enemy formations with bombs and machine-gun fire, he was assailed at a height of 5,000 feet by eight triplanes, which dived at him from all directions. He enabled his observer to direct fire bursts at each machine in turn, shooting down three out of control. By this time he had received five wounds. A bullet penetrated the petrol tank and set the machine afire. He then climbed out on the left bottom plane, controlling the machine from the side of the fuselage, and by side-slipping steeply, kept the flames to one side, thus enabling the observer to continue firing until the ground was reached. The observer had been wounded six times when the machine landed in No Man's Land, and McLeod, notwithstanding his own wounds, dragged him from the burning wreckage at great personal risk from machine-gun fire. He was also wounded by a bomb, but placed his comrade in comparative safety before falling himself from exhaustion.

McLeod first came under the notice of his superiors by volunteering to attack single-handed a German gun of heavy calibre, which was doing much damage on the western front. He returned to his base after locating the gun and destroying an enemy captive balloon and 11 Germans who were manning it.

Pale Cheeked Women Told About Restoring A Rosy Complexion

A few years ago the girl with pale, drawn cheeks scarcely knew what to do in order to restore her fading appearance. At that time there was no blood-food medium made that really would put colour and strength into systems that were more or less worn out.

To-day it's different. The blood can be quickly nourished, can be made rich, red, and healthy. All you have to do is take two Ferrozone Tablets with a sip or two of water after meals. The effect is almost magical.

Mothers, look at your children. Are they ruddy and strong—do they eat and sleep well, or are they pale, weak, and anaemic?

FERROZONE will rebuild them. Take your own case—is your blood strong and rich? Have you that old-time strength and vigour, or are you somewhat under the weather?

FERROZONE will supply the strengthening elements you require. It is a blood-forming, nourishing tonic that makes every ailing person well.

FERROZONE is a marvellous remedy, it contains in concentrated form certain rare qualties that especially fit it in cases of anaemia, poor colour, thin blood, tiredness, and loss of weight.

Every day you put off using FERROZONE you lose ground. Get it today, sold in 50 cent boxes by all dealers, or by mail from the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

LEFT GROOM PENNILESS.

KITCHENER, Ont., Dec. 16.—Aaron Baumbach and Miss Ida Wettlauffer were wedded Wednesday, and left during the afternoon for a honeymoon in Toronto. However, the honeymoon was brief, for on the train a pickpocket frisked the groom of his roll of $100 and left them penniless. The father-in-law came to the rescue and wired hotel expenses and a ticket.

Make War on Rats.

One rat destroys one farthing's worth of national wealth every day of its life.

The rat is a pest when alive and useless when dead. Under pressure of famine rats have been eaten, but one has to be pretty hungry before tackling a ragout or rodent or a rat rasher. Alive, the rat has not a single redeeming feature. He touches everything, and spoils everything he touches.

The medical profession has long declared war on rats, calling them the most efficient of germ-bearers and the cause of epidemics, but the slaying of the prolific little pest has by no means kept pace with its birth-rate. The increase of a single pair of rats in five years has been calculated at 940,369,969,152 rats. One pair of rats may have 880 descendants in a year.

Now that the rat has become a competitor for our food rations something adequate is to be done. The Government has determined to organize a rat-catching campaign.

A rat specialist known to the writer disposes of 40,000 rats every year, visiting leading hotels, warehouses, and the like.—Tit-Bits.

A Rare Day.

"You're always getting up benefits for other people; when are you going to have one for yourself?" a friend asked Charlie Murray of Mack Sennett comedies. "I've already had one!" retorted Murray. "The other day I got so much for a dollar at the grocer's that I couldn't help saying, 'You've given me good weight this morning.' 'Yes,' he replied, 'this is meatless day.'"

CHURCH FAILS HAPSBURGS.

Vienna Newspaper Says Clergy Are Deserting Austria.

How misplaced was the faith of the Hapsburg dynasty in the power of the Roman Catholic Church to support it in its hour of need is pointed out in an editorial in the Vienna Arbeiter-Zeitung of Sept. 26, a copy of which was recently received in London. Beginning by emphasizing the peculiar confidence of the Austrian state in the conservative functions of the church and remarking that nowhere has "the alliance between Throne and Altar" found sharper expression than in Austria, the Arbeiter-Zeitung delevops this theme historically, and argues that the church has always profited by every development. So now the church is shifting its course, and more or less suddenly raising the sign of freedom and democracy. It is declared that "a revulsion from Austria dominates the Roman Catholic camp," and, after referring to recent clerical support of both the Czechs and the Jugoslavs, the article proceeds:

"Of course it does not occur to us to reproach the Southern Slav bishops or the Czech persons because they go with their people. But the point here is that the traditional between state and church in Austria, sanctified by history, has proved in the hour of trial to be empty bluff. The Austrian state reckoned upon the power of the Roman Catholic control of consciences. But this power has for a long time past, in order to satisfy the changing times, assumed the forms of democracy. The Czech priests would shut themselves out from their own people if they were to take the part of Austria, and they would be miserably deserted by their own sheep. And if the Jugoslav movement is embracing broad circles of the people, under the lead of the clergy and because of their sermons and examples, that is a proof that the wind of the national spirit has taken an overpowering hold of the clergy, and that the idea of independence is working more powerfully among the clergy than the idea of Catholic unity in the faith, anchored in the Austrian state with its Catholic ecclesiastical colors."

The Arbeiter-Zeitung observes that, with the exception of the German Catholics, all the Roman Catholic peoples of the world are on the side of the Entente. It says that it is useless for the German Catholics in Austria to fight against the inevitable; if they try to resist their priests they will effect nothing, but will lose the last remnants of their own political influence. The Socialist organ declares that the power of Rome has always depended upon ability to adapt itself to public feeling, and it says:

"Thus, for decades past, the Austrian state has made the largest advances to the clergy, only now to learn that in the moment of urgent need the clergy neither will nor can deliver the goods—neither will nor can deliver a patriotism fortified and dedicated by the church."

The article ends by remarking that, just when "the black rats are leaving the ship," the Austrian ship of state is in charge of a "black" steersman.

KIDNEY DISEASE OVERCOME.

Mr. James Prouse, cattle dealer, Shebo, Sask., writes: "For about ten years I suffered from kidney disease; at times was bad with backache, and derangements of the digestive organs. During that time I was treated by four different doctors. One day I read in Dr. Chase's Almanac about the Kidney-Liver Pills and began to use them. Altogether I used six boxes. All I need say is that I feel well now and attribute this condition to the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills."

Publicity or Bankruptcy?

Bradstreets statement that 84 per cent of all failures are among non-advertisers is significant.

Intelligent advertising has become absolutely essential to every modern industry—

But what shall the advertiser do in the face of war conditions, when he finds it difficult to get goods to fill his orders?

First of all, remember that the fundamental purpose of advertising is to fix indelibly the trade mark or the trade name in the public mind.

A let-up in that campaign must be fatal to any product.

The American Rolling Mill Company declares its purpose to continue its advertising, although for two and a half years it has been unable to supply the demand for its product.

"We are building," they say, "a permanent business edifice, and some day we would have to spend millions of dollars buying back the business and goodwill of our clients if they are forsaken in this emergency."

Unless advertising is kept up without break the advertiser loses the results of all previous effort.

Here is a warning to the advertizer who neglects the dull season in summer—

When advertisements are fewest is the very time when a message to the public may get the most attention, providing, of course, that the character of the advertising deserves it.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Haters

By R. RAY BAKER

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Maybelle St. Clare sat in her dressing room, smeared grease paint on her face, recited sotto voce her great song hit and hated men.

"Here's some more gorgeous flowers—from a Mr. Kendricks," announced Geraldine Alberton, her maid, entering the room and holding a bouquet of red roses at arm's length, so she could survey it with the eye of a critic.

And why shouldn't Geraldine Alberton be considered a connoisseur on matters of flowers? Hadn't she personally received 519 bouquets addressed to her mistress in the year and a half since Maybelle had made her debut as a singer and dancer on the vaudeville stage?

And hadn't each and every one of those offerings from admiring men been crushed deliberately under the same small foot or else dumped unceremoniously into a convenient waste basket?

"Well, don't bother me about them," grumbled Maybelle, as she pencilled little black crosses at the corners of her eyes, adding luster to her already vivacious countenance. "Drop them out the window. I noticed there's an alley there."

Not that Maybelle St. Clare, "dainty, diminutive, dancing damsel," had an aversion for flowers. To the contrary, she possessed a normal girl's fondness for them. It was the fact that men sent them to her that caused her to spurn these particular bouquets that were delivered to her room on the average of four a night.

When she lived in Ludington, Mich., Mabel Clare (the extra "y" and "le" and the "St." had been acquired since the aforementioned debut) had not been a man-hater. In fact—impossible as it now seemed—she had been in love, tremendously in love, at one time. That was before she decided on a career instead of a dishrag and carpet sweeper.

It was her only love affair. The young man had wooed her for three years and won her, when along came this question of women's rights. The wedding bells were about due to ring, when study of suffrage and sundry other subjects put that career idea into Mabel's head. Her fiance objected vehemently to the stage, although she insisted that he should accompany her and utilize his musical ability to help make her famous. She had just about won him over to her way of thinking when the suffrage question came up to have its fate decided by the electors of the state. Mabel took a prominent part in the campaign, and when the amendment was defeated she was heartbroken. In the midst of her tears of disappointment, while her husband-to-be was attempting to comfort her, she ceased sobbing sufficiently to remark that she supposed, of course, he had voted to enfranchise women. Being an honest but undiplomatic young man, he confessed that he had marked his cross in the "No" square. And from that moment he stopped being a prospective benedict.

"You're just a lowbrow, with backwoods ideas, and you'll never make any progress," she had cried as she showed him the door. "I never want to see you again—or any other man. I'll never get married—never! I'll carve a career on the vaudeville stage, as I have planned; but I'll do it without your assistance or any other man's. I'll show that men are not necessary, and you can stay here and rust into a grave."

She gave up her position in a dry goods store and went to Chicago, where she had an aunt whose husband exercised some influence in the theatrical world and who had taken considerable sympathetic interest in Mabel's footlight ambitions. The other aunt, with whom Mabel lived in Ludington, tried to dissuade her; but the objections were overruled; and as both the young lady's parents were dead, there was no one to interfere with her working out a future in her chosen course.

She sent no letters to her erstwhile sweetheart—not even a post card picture of Lincoln park. "He's too narrow-minded and we have nothing in common," she repeatedly assured herself to assuage the pain that was bound to be felt after such a long and serious affair of the heart.

While Maybelle St. Clare "made up" for her first appearance in the Detroit vaudeville theater, Philip Warner sat in the orchestra pit doing his bit in the making of melody for the first act on the bill. As he puffed out his cheeks and performed gyrations with the trombone slide, he kept his eyes averted from the slackwire artist, principally because the artist was a woman—and he hated women. His one disastrous love affair had embittered his heart against the sex.

Maybelle St. Clare's act was third on the bill. She was electric-lighted out in front as the headliner; consequently the audience was in an expectant mood. The orchestra rendered a dashing, soul-thrilling selection, and when the crescendo had reached its climax the girl who had carved a career tripped daintily out on the stage and bowed and blew kisses in response to the generous applause.

She was feeling especially full of the artistic spirit this evening; possibly because she was paying her first professional visit to her home state and some one from "up home" might be an observer of her effort. The audience was with her from the start, and anybody who ever had doubted her vocal or terpsichorean ability would have been forced to amend his opinion upon witnessing her offering that evening.

Near the close of the act was when she always made the "big hit." She did it by rendering a song that she had stumbled on by accident in a music store in the West. It was not a popular song; she had never heard of it before, but it had seemed to fit the one void in her repertoire, so she had annexed it. Shortly after that she got recognition on the "big time" circuits and she had been told her "landing" there was due largely to that one selection.

The orchestra became silent and the audience hushed as she stepped close to the footlights and waited for darkness and the spotlight. Evidently there was a misunderstanding at the switchboard, for there was a vexatious delay about darkening the house. It was only a moment that she stood waiting, but that moment was enough for her gaze to meet that of the trombone player—and that settled it!

The lights went out and the spotlight found her, but she stood in a trance. She opened her mouth, but no sound came forth—for the simple reason that every word and note of that very necessary song had fled from her brain when she recognized that face in the orchestra.

She concentrated with all her will, but those eyes in the pit, which she could not see but could feel piercing her through and through so disconcerted her that she was unable to apprehend the elusive words and notes.

Horrors! she thought. What if some one from home were a witness of her plight! A woman tittered foolishly and a man's guffaw followed.

'Sounds like Jeff Sullivan and Kittie Frickles," she told herself. "This is terrible!"

She shifted her weight from her right to her left foot, as perspiration streaked a canal through her artificial complexion. She had stood in that one pose at least a week—so it seemed—when it suddenly dawned on her that a whisper was floating up from the orchestra pit. A husky voice was repeating over and over:

"Back on the old plantation lives a white-haired negro man."

Maybelle St. Clare suddenly came to herself. Those were the first words of her song. Her mind pounced upon them and with them the tune. She smiled and opened her mouth once more, and her "great hit" scored another success.

After the show there was a little party in a nearby cafe. The participants were Maybelle St. Clare and Philip Warner. On her bosom she wore a bouquet of red roses which he had sent an usher to get when he received the note telling him she wished to see him and "thank" him.

As she nibbled a chicken sandwich she remarked casually:

"Do you know, Philip, I've changed my mind about woman suffrage. I agree with you that woman's place is in the home. I've carved my career, but I'm sick and tired of it all."

He dipped a spoon in his coffee and sipped testily.

"I've changed my mind, too," he announced. "I'm in favor of giving women the vote or anything else they want."

She laughed, hesitated somewhat confusedly and held a menu card before her eyes.

"If that's the case," she said simply, "you'll give me back that ring I returned to you two years ago."

He nearly choked on the hot coffee, but he managed to swallow it, and reached into a vest pocket.

"I've always kept it with me," he declared.

In defiance of curious eyes at nearby tables, she allowed him to reach across and place the thin gold, diamond-set band on a finger which it had graced once before.

"Now, will you explain how you happened to be acquainted with the words of 'Where the Cotton Grows?'" she asked, "and how you knew I needed that song to make my act go?"

He signaled the waiter to bring the check.

"Certainly," he replied amiably. "The program told me you were supposed to sing that song, although it didn't inform me that Maybelle St. Clare was Mabel Clare. I knew the words of the piece because I wrote them—and the music, too. If you'll dig up your copy you'll see printed on it, 'Words and Music by Philipe de Warnaire.'"

CHASE & SANBORN MONTREAL

Starling Has Multiplied.

The starling is about as tough and hardy as the sparrow and, like the latter, is able to subsist on a variety of food, being none too particular what he eats. The starling was brought here from England in 1890 by a naturalist, who turned several score of them loose in Central park, New York. Although the starling is not migratory, he is often something of a wanderer. After being turned loose here it was not until eight years later that he made his appearance in Plainfield, N. J. He is now to be found from Maine to Washington, and his number runs into the millions.

Nature's Masterpieces.

The tree-top leaves turn to silver in the light breezes which have no transmuting effect on the heavier foliage below. Of course the leaf simply turns and catches the silver light; but the effect is sterling. Grace lives in the tree tops. Nature has a way of giving her products a rare finish. Her masterpieces are the best of her workmanship in form and in color.

Her Difficulty.

Bessie was telling rather excitedly about a dream she had, when suddenly she stuttered, gulped and stopped without completing the sentence. "Why, child, what's the matter?" her mother asked.

"I swallowed a word," answered Bessie with [illegible]

Are you giving Your Mind a Chance?

Many a man's mind is distracted by his health, when it ought to be centered upon his business.

Business and professional men and women usually exert their brains at the expense of their bodies. They are forced to neglect exercise. They often form bad habits in eating, sleeping, resting or playing. Hence, they easily form the worst habit of them all—constipation.

Constipation means infinitely more than mere failure of the bowels to act regularly and thoroughly. It means weakened or over-tired intestinal muscles. It means stagnation of the bowel contents, increased fermentation, putrefaction and germ action, and production of irritant and poisonous substances.

These are absorbed into the blood and carried all over the body, irritating the nerves, clouding the brain, hardening the arteries, raising the blood pressure, etc.

Nor can all this be cured or prevented by taking pills, castor oil, purgative mineral waters, salts, etc. all of which make matters worse instead of better.

But the Nujol Treatment for Constipation acts differently. It is both harmless and efficient.

Nujol helps Nature to re-establish easy, thorough, daily evacuation of the bowels—as regular as clockwork.

Nujol makes it easy for intestinal muscles to act.

Nujol prevents stagnation of bowel contents.

Nujol absorbs poisons and carries them out of the body.

Messenger Shells.

For some time past the Germans have been making use of a special "message" shell both for liaison work within their lines and for throwing propaganda material into the allied trenches.

This missile is a tin tube, about ten inches long and one inch in diameter, with wings at its base. The top of the shell contains a box destined to inclose messages; below is a space filled with fireworks; at the base there is a shotgun cartridge, the explosion of which propels the whole and lights the fireworks in midair. This projectile is fired by a "granatenwerfer," grenade by a rifle, and can be thrown a distance of 600 yards.

Airplanes Take All Aluminum.

Aluminum is in such great demand now, largely on account of airplane production, that even foundries and rolling mills on government work are able to obtain only enough metal to keep supply about two or three days ahead. It is reported that some foundries on work aside from immediate war requirements, have had to close temporarily. Statements on stocks and metal used are being made to the Government regularly.

His Fortune in Stamps.

A story is told of a collection of stamps which was sold recently in Paris for 80,000 francs. The owner of the collection is the son of a French banker in Petrograd who, when conditions began to be thoroughly unpleasant in Russia under the Bolshevist regime, asked leave to return to France. This was granted on condition that he should take only 1,000 francs with him. The sum was somewhat inadequate, but the Frenchman was a man of resource. He bethought himself of his stamp collection, made many years before, and, during his last few days in Russia, he exchanged as many of his personal valuables as possible for stamps. He then left the country with the regulation 1,000 francs in his pocket, and in his hold-all a stamp album.

Rice Riots in Japan

SOME three months ago the fishwomen of a village on the Japan sea coast (whose husbands, engaged in another trade, are mostly absent abroad) astonished the country by a united demand for cheaper rice. They marched in a body numbering several hundreds to the village office and later to the houses of local rich men, making threatening demands and causing general consternation, says the Tokio correspondent of the London Times. The example of these women spread rapidly throughout Japan. Their exploits were freely reported in the press, and it was publicity thus given that started an agitation which developed in a few days into something very much resembling open resistance to the constituted authorities. Then the Home Office took action, and suddenly forbade all reference to the riots, even the reporting of facts and all editorial comment on the situation. This act provoked opposition from the newspapers. The leading press society made formal protests, and when the situation in the country had reached a really critical stage the newspaper leaders pressed their claim, and the Government authorities so far relaxed as to promise to issue reports twice daily of the progress of the riots.

Before the Home Office took the drastic action of forbidding all news, the public had read of the alarming conditions in Kobe, where thousands of men, acting deliberately and under what appeared to be an organized command, carried out the destruction of large buildings and their contents. Chief among these was the head office of one of the leading firms in the country, the Suzuki Shoten, whose development in the past decade has been remarkable. The head office of this concern is housed in a former hotel building. Here thousands of rioters deliberately made a bonfire of books and papers and everything they could seize, and then poured petroleum on the floors of the building itself, and so destroyed it. The motive actuating the rioters in this case, it is universally believed, is the alleged fact of Baron Goto's connection with the firm, and the disagreeable suspicion that the Foreign Minister has been greatly enriched by this connection, particularly by the firm's large dealings in rice.

With the accomplishment of the destruction in Kobe, the Government suddenly announced its newspaper ban, and for several days the public were in complete ignorance of what was happening in town and country. But now, with the lifting of the ban, we are enabled to realize, even by aid of the brief official reports, the extent and character of the riots. Tokio, where crowds of 10,000 to a few hundred have "demonstrated," seems to have suffered least, but here 700 arrests have been made; we read of marching and protesting bands in the towns of 18 prefectures and of the destruction of rich men's homes, police boxes, rice stores, and other shops all over the country; of clashes with police and troops and the injury of many civilians. The determined act of the women of Toyama would not have had such results had there not been a serious cause, and if statesmen are wise they will determine upon no makeshift measures, such as have, so far, been adopted in dealing with popular grievances. In Japan troubles of this character have been and are temporarily allayed by Imperial and Government grants to the distressed, followed by doles from rich men. But at best this is a poor remedy. The people call not for charity, but justice.

What is the remedy? The Imperial Constitution provides a remedy and the people have it in their power to apply it. It is in the extension, first of the suffrage. It may not be generally known abroad that the vote in Japan is entirely in the hands of the upper official, industrial and mercantile and shopkeeping classes; legislation has in the past been devoted exclusively to the maintenance of the interests of these classes. One seeks in vain for a single measure which is aimed at alleviating the condition of the poor—the condition of the middle class, the school teachers, petty officials, clerks, and intelligent workers. In 1903, during what may be called the Katsura era, when a determined effort was made to rid the country of the so-called dangerous thoughts, his Majesty's name was used in the issue of the famous Boshin Rescript exhorting the people to thrift, but it was in that era that many taxes weighing most heavily upon the people were put in force and have never been repealed.

These are the root causes of the public discontent. Popular resentment against such acts have been smouldering for years; they are kept in control by a bureaucratic system that has its duplicate only in Germany and Austria, and of late years they have been witnesses of the thoughtless and aggravating extravagance of the war-rich merchants and the victims of the steadily increasing cost of all commodities, some being many hundreds per cent. higher than they were in 1914. The people of Japan have the reputation of being courteous, law-abiding, in a word, docile; but they are human. The women of Toyama have set an example that will become historic. We have only to go back in England to the bread riots of eighty years ago to find the reason prompting the outbreak which the authorities in Japan are now endeavoring to control by means of a change in Government.

SICK HEADACHE and CONSTIPATION CURED BY Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills.

When your liver becomes sluggish and inactive, the bowels become constipated, the tongue becomes coated, the breath bad, and the stomach all out of order.

Then come those terrible sick headaches. They take out every bit of life and ambition, bring on depression, and often end in complete mental and physical prostration.

To keep the liver active, and your bowels moving regularly, is the only way to get rid of the constipation and the distressing sick headaches. Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills will do this for you by stimulating the sluggish liver into manufacturing sufficient bile to act properly on the bowels, thus making them active and regular.

Mrs. Winslow McKay, Jordan Branch, N.S., writes: "I have been sick for a number of years with sick headache and constipation. I tried all kinds of doctors' medicines, but none did me any good. I tried Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills, and after using four vials I am completely cured. I would heartily recommend them to all sufferers."

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills are small and easy to take; and do not gripe, weaken or sicken as so many pills do. Price 25c a vial at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Glass of Hot Water Before Breakfast a Splendid Habit

Open sluices of the system each morning and wash away the poisonous, stagnant matter.

Those of us who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when we arise; splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, lame back, can, instead, both look and feel as fresh as a daisy always by washing the poisons and toxins from the body with phosphated hot water each morning.

We should drink, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to flush from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleaning, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary tract before putting more food into the stomach.

The action of limestone phosphate and hot water on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast and it is said to be but a little while until the roses begin to appear in the cheeks. A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will cost very little at the drug store, but is sufficient to make anyone who is bothered with biliousness, constipation, stomach trouble or rheumatism a real enthusiast on the subject of internal sanitation. Try it and you are assured that you will look better and feel better in every way shortly.

Britain Impresses Americans

THERE has recently returned to the United States a party of newspaper men after having spent a couple of months in England and France. Among them was Mr. F. W. Kellogg, editor and publisher of the San Francisco Call, who has given an interesting interview to the American Editor and Publisher upon his impressions. Judging from some of Mr. Kellogg's connections he did not go to England with the most cordial feelings, but if this assumption is correct it must be all the more to his credit that he speaks with such warmth of the achievements of the British people. "I was amazed at what I saw," he says. "In four years Great Britain has done what it took Germany forty to achieve. The United States has done marvellously well in the brief time since we entered the war, but England and Scotland have done better. On the Clyde, where the great shipbuilding plants are located, there is as much work going on as in all the shipyards in the United States. We saw 300 ways there all occupied by ships in the building, and being turned out and launched at a rate almost unbelievable."

He pays a handsome tribute to the women workers in the following passage:

"In the munitions plants there is a bustle that vies with the fastest of our American factories, which opens the visitors' eyes to the vigor and efficiency of British women, and which certainly places on their heads the deserved crown of patriotism. Row on row of American machinery are established in great batteries, and at them, as well as at British-made machines, 900,000 of the women of that country daily took their places in order that their men may risk and lose their lives in battle. We saw some of these devoted women, wives, mothers, and sweethearts, many of them of gentle blood, handling enormous 1,500-pound shells. It will be something, after the war is over, to have been a British woman munition worker. Danger of explosions has not terrified them, and heavy manual labor has not deterred them. Their spirit is hot for victory, and the part that America is taking has added to their strength and increased their determination.

In cottage or in palace he found the same spirit prevailing. The party was received by King George at Sandringham with as little ceremony as would have been expected from a business man. "Indeed," says Mr. Kellogg, "his office is just what might be expected in the workroom of a business man, only perhaps a little more intimate." He continues:

"We were agreeably surprised to find that King George was much like other people, and not at all impressed with his own dignity and importance. He is very human, and has a keen sense of humor. He told us a story about himself of which Lord Northcliffe, who was with our party, said: 'If you don't tell that when you get home, I'll tell it for you.' So here goes:

"The King had been talking with Gen. Pershing and Gen. Bliss in the open at American headquarters. As he turned to go away he heard an American soldier say to another: 'Who's that bug?' 'Why,' replied his bunkey, 'that's the King of England.' 'Well,' was the response, 'where's his crown, then?'

"The King told the story with droll humor and evident glee. Mr. Bok, as our chuckles subsided, said:

"'You know, your Majesty, many of our boys think you spend most of your time wearing your crown and carrying your sceptre.'

"'Don't forget my ermine robe,' the King came back with a laugh. 'Don't forget my ermine robe.'

Of Lloyd George, he writes: "The day after our visit to the King we met Lloyd George at a luncheon given for us in London. The Premier impressed me as most active and alert mentally. He has a charming manner and a magnetic personality. He answered easily and freely every question we asked, and with a most open and frank manner. He is confident that the end of the war was in sight, and he assured us that any attempt by Germany to break the Entente of Britain and France would fail. He also has the utmost and implicit confidence in President Wilson's integrity and ability. At the same time he assured us that Mr. Wilson never took a step without previously communicating with both French and British, but that the President's answers to Germany had been so cleverly prepared and his use of the English language so able, that neither French nor British had found it necessary to suggest the change of a single word."

In Mr. Kellogg's opinion great numbers of American soldiers will make their permanent homes in France and England at the end of the war. He was told that before the war France had 2,000,000 more women than she had men, and the disparity has probably been doubled. In other European countries, also, there has been a tremendous drain upon the man-power of the country, and the probability is that there are hundreds of thousands of girls who in the ordinary course of events would have been married, but who will perforce remain single unless they are chosen by soldiers from other lands. Great numbers of American soldiers will be educated in England after the war on a plan authorized by the United States Congress, and they have already been made to feel so much at home that those without particular home ties in the United States are likely to become British or French citizens.

Germany Loses Shipping Genius

ALBERT BALLIN, the king of German shipping merchants, died the week that the armistice was signed. Rumor hints that he committed suicide when he learned what humiliating terms of peace Germany would be forced to accept, or else that he feared the German revolutionists would hold him responsible with others of the group at the "Potsdam Conference," where the die for war was cast. It is not known that Ballin was in favor of the war. As the owner of what was the greatest single shipping company in the world, the Hamburg-American Line, he must have seen that one of the first results of the struggle when the British Grand Fleet was ordered out would be the certain loss of business of his company as long as the war lasted. It is possible that he calculated that, while he would lose at first, he would gain with interest in the end. So far as we know, whether he approved or advised the war in the first place, he was a supporter of it. He was no Lichnowsky or Muehlon.

However he may be reckoned by the Germans himself or whatever may be the view of the neutral nations on his influence with the German Government, there can be no doubt that in any history of influential Jews of the last half century he would be given a leading place. He was a Jew, but not, it is said, a bigoted one. First of all he was a business man, and since he was the son of a poor man and educated himself and built up Hamburg as one of the greatest ports in the world, it would not be excessive to call him a genius of business. As a lad he went to England and served a commercial apprenticeship, later returning to Hamburg, and, having made a special study of emigrant traffic, he found himself the possessor of a gold mine, for in those days and in the forty years to follow emigration from Germany was a veritable gold mine for those who were in a position to take toll of the traffic. As his steamship line grew, Hamburg grew as a port until it reached and passed Liverpool, in its shipping.

Ballin is given credit for resolutely opposing the idea of the pan-Germans, which was shared by the Kaiser, that the German Government, by means of subsidies should be permitted to obtain a controlling interest in the shipping of Germany. He combated this on business grounds, and while the grandiose dream of an official sitting in Berlin or Hamburg controlling the thousands of German ships in all parts of the world appealed to Wilhelm, Ballin considered it unworkable, and in the end bound to result in disaster. In other ways he set his will against that of the War Lord, for time and again he declined to be made a member of the Prussian House of Lords and attach the "von" to his name. Nor did he view with any more favor the suggestion that he should abandon his own religion and become a Christian, as the word is understood in Germany. Whenever the Kaiser urged him to take one or other of these steps, it is said, that he always compromised on accepting a royal photograph.

Ballin was reported to have lost favor with the Emperor, because of his moderate war views or his wish for an early peace, but the truth of this report has not been established. Ballin in letters and interviews repeatedly declared for a German victory and a strong German peace.

The power exercised by Albert Ballin in the political affairs of Germany was always greatly overrated, according to Ambassador, James W. Gerard, who came to know the late shipping ruler of Germany quite well in the four years Mr. Gerard held his Berlin post.

"I do not believe that Ballin was consulted about the beginning of the war," said Mr. Gerard recently. "At any rate, I do not think the militarists bothered to ascertain whether he was in favor of beginning hostilities. I know, indeed, that once the war was begun, Ballin immediately seemed to lose favor at court. Prior to August, 1914, Ballin was high in the favor of the Emperor, but with the coming of war days a gulf came between the Hamburg-American Line head and the Kaiser.

"Ballin was nothing like as powerful in home affairs as the public generally supposed. The real industrial rulers of Germany, at least, during the early days of the war, were much in evidence. They were the iron and steel magnates of the Rhine, of Westphalia. Although Ballin, through his shipping connections, was well known to the world, his supremacy even in that field was not complete, for he had a strong rival in the North German Lloyd people."

THIN PEOPLE SHOULD TAKE PHOSPHATE

Nothing Like Plain Bitro-Phosphate to Put on Firm, Healthy Flesh and to Increase Strength, Vigour and Nerve Force.

Judging from the countless preparations and treatments which are continually being advertised for the purpose of making thin people fleshy, developing arms, neck and bust, and replacing ugly hollows and angles by the soft curved lines of health and beauty, there are evidently thousands of men and women who keenly feel their excessive thinness.

Thinness and weakness are usually due to starved nerves. Our bodies need more phosphate than is contained in modern foods. Physicians claim there is nothing that will supply this deficiency so well as the organic phosphate known among druggists as bitro-phosphate, which is inexpensive and sold by McDermid and Jury and by most druggists under a guarantee of satisfaction or money back. By feeding the nerves directly and by supplying the body cells with the necessary phosphoric food elements, bitro-phosphate quickly produces a welcome transformation in the appearance; the increase in weight frequently being astonishing.

This increase in weight also carries with it a general improvement in the health. Nervousness, sleeplessness and lack of energy, which nearly always accompany excessive thinness, soon disappear, dull eyes become bright, and pale cheeks glow with the bloom of perfect health.

CAUTION:— Although bitro-phosphate is unsurpassed for relieving nervousness, sleeplessness and general weakness, it should not, owing to its remarkable flesh-growing properties, be used by anyone who does not desire to put on flesh

Bennett's Earnings.

"The Pretty Lady," by Mr. Arnold Bennett, is perhaps the most-talked-of book of the year in England; "The Title," his new play at the Royalty Theatre, London, is the most-discussed play.

Mr. Bennett is one of the highest paid authors in the world. He charges 100 guineas for an article of about 1,000 words.

When a young man he abandoned the law to become assistant editor of a woman's weekly, and then devoted himself to the writing of books.

Some people complain that Mr. Bennett's novels are too long, and friends have chaffed him unmercifully. Said one of them:

"I have enjoyed trying to read your books, Mr. Bennett. A year ago I started 'Clayhanger,' and I propose to finish it."

8 HOUR DAY AND HIGHER WAGES FOR SECTIONMEN, TOO

How the McAdoo Award Has Brought Better Conditions for Railway Employees—Telegraphers' Appeal Has Not Yet Been Settled.

STRENGTHEN LABOUR BODIES

Labour history was made yesterday when the section men of the Grand Trunk railway in Peterborough worked their first eight-hour day. It was the effectuation of the McAdoo award, and applies to all the Canadian lines under the agreement accepted by the men some months ago. The fact that the great Brotherhoods of Railway Workers have gained the shorter working day for practically every employee connected with this industry, is a convincing assurance that the labour revolution that was quietly accomplished during the war will have lasting results. So widespread has been the change that the first hopes have become convictions that a new day has dawned for Labour as a whole. The application of the McAdoo award to the section men, practically synchronized with Premier Lloyd George's announcement of the eight hour day for the employees of British railways. And behind this strongly entrenched branch of Labour it is believed other industries that have secured the shorter working day will hold their ground, and those that have remained in the rear of the movement will be brought up into line.

Some of the Straws.

If the swaying of straws indicates the direction of the wind, the vast victory for the Railway Brotherhoods will give a new impetus to the eight hour movement and add inspiration to the workers in other industries whose inchoate plans should be clearly fashioned and strengthened by the success of the railway brotherhoods.

The full import of the vast change in railroading that is involved in the McAdoo award may be indicated by reference to some of the minor details rather than expressed in a general survey that would lose force by its diffusion. Only a few years ago the gatemen were paid $1.10 a day, and after many petitions this was raised to $1.25. The men worked in twelve hour shifts, and were supposed to count themselves lucky for the handout that went by the term of wages. But the old order has passed, and with the new has come the eight hour shift with the wage of 36 1-2 cents an hour. In other words three men are required now to do the work of the former two at each gate, and their wages are more than double the old rate. Gatemen receiving $2.92 a day for eight hours would have considered themselves almost on par with the road superintendent, who used to turn deaf ears to their reminders that men couldn't give their families many advantages on $1.10 a day.

Section Men Too.

The McAdoo award likewise brings the eight hour day to the section men, with a scale of wages that is said to be decidedly attractive. In fact all the engineers, trainmen, shop employees and others are now enjoying the shorter working day, with other conditions that are also improvements which, it is believed, that not only bring advantages to the men, but will also result in a better service for the companies.

The operators alone are working under the old conditions. Their fortunes in the labour movement present a rather interesting anomaly that will soon be removed, however. The telegraphers were among the first to agitate for the shorter hours, and the section men were about the last. And once again the last have been first, or thereabouts. Under the McAdoo award the men receiving the smallest wages were granted the highest percentage of increase. This applies to section men and gatemen particularly, keeping in mind the local system to illustrate the changed conditions.

Gives More Employment.

Labour's contention that the eight-hour day will provide increased employment is realized even in the affairs of the local gatemen. The introduction of the eight hour day, replacing the twelve hour, necessitated the employment of seven additional men in Peterborough. Six of them were returned soldiers, who have been put on the street gates. The seventh was a new man for the "diamond," who it was felt should be experienced. Hence, one of the old employees was engaged to provide the third man for the more responsible post.

The Clemenceau Govt. Sustained

318-176 Present Government is Sustained—Vote taken on Acceptability of Armistice Terms.

(Special to Examiner.)

PARIS, December 17. — The Chamber of Deputies to-day passed a vote of confidence in the Clemenceau government by 310 to 176. The vote was taken on the question of whether the armistice terms are acceptable when Deputy Emil Constant asked why the total immediate demobilization of the German army was not included.

AN ALLIANCE WITH POLAND

Canadian Press:

PARIS, Dec. 17.—In discussing the severance of relations between Poland and Germany, the Petit Journal foresees an alliance in the near future of the Polish government with the Democratic party of Posen (German Poland.) The Polish government, it continues, is preparing to adhere completely to the Entente Alliance.

Was Refused Admission

Stirring Scenes at First Session—Liebnecht Not Wanted.

Special to The Examiner

BERLIN, Dec. 17. — Karl Liebnecht and Rosa Luxemberg, Bolshevik leaders had been turned down, to attend the national meeting of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Council. Radical members introduced a resolution demanding for Liebknecht and his aide the right to sit in conference, but they were outvoted by a large majority. At least 80,000 persons gathered outside the Prussian parliament buildings during the negotiations when it became known that the Bolshevik leaders had eben turned down. Liebknecht suddenly appeared on the roof of the parliament building and began to address the crowds. He was received with much cheering. Although surrounded by government soldiers, Liebknecht spoke fearlessly. He led cries of "down with Scheidemann," "down with Ebert," "down with Haase," despite the fact that these officials were sitting in the House within sound of his voice. Liebknecht concluded his speech from the roof with an appeal for the proletariat en mass to proclaim for a social and political revolution.

Scene Inside.

The scene in the Parliament Chamber was startling when the meeting was called to order. The room was filled with soldiers in field grey uniform. Mingling with them were workers in shabby clothes. There were also a few sailors. And this room formerly was tenanted only by legislators in most formal and correct dress. There was one woman delegate and there were several women in the audience. They were the first ever to enter the chamber. Half a dozen officers sat on the rostrum, which was draped with red banners of Socialism

The first business transacted was the election of officers. Major Leinert, of Hanover, a former member of the Reichstag, and a supporter of Scheidemann, was chosen to preside. Three alternatives were selected. The session got under way with military precision. The strictest parliamentary order was maintained, save for occasional outbursts of laughter.

Anniversary of Election Day

Union Government May Carry on For Period of Reconstruction.

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Dec. 17.—This is the first anniversary of the day on which the electorate of the Dominion gave the Union government its mandate. One year ago to-day was polling day, though the actual result of the polling was not known for some time later, and declarations were not made until March. The anniversary of the latter date, the ballots will be burned, though it is stated that there is some sort of an agitation to have them preserved for investigation.

From present indication it is the intention of the Union government to carry on for the period of reconstruction, and there appears to be little likelihood of a break-up during the coming session at least, though there may be apostates from its ranks. After that it will be for the government to decide whether, with the return of the men from overseas and their transfer to civil life, distribution should occur and an appeal be made to the people.

ENTERTAINMENT

The Humeston "New Ear" has the following press comment regarding Lieut. H. Gordon Manning, who will give his lecture in George St. Methodist Church, on Friday, Dec. 27th, 1918:

The address Friday evening by Lieut. H. G. Manning, produced a deep impression. It is not often that a Chautauqua audience listens with more evident attention and interest. His subject here was "The War From An Officer's Standpoint," and the story of real experiences was told in an earnest manner and produced deep conviction. Addresses like that of Lieut. Manning will help greatly in producing a true spirit of patriotism.

Parting Company With Wilhelm

German Chancellor, Finds Little Sympathy for Hohenzollern—Cannot Create Bread.

TANGLED SITUATION

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Dec. 17.—(British Admiralty Wireless.) — Friederich Ebert, German Chancellor, in an interview, declared that he knew of no provision in law upon which the ex-Kaiser would have to be given up.

"We have separated ourselves from him after decades of bitter struggle," Ebert said, 'and now we only desire that guilt for the outbreak of the war should finally be fixed in order that he should be exposed once and for all. I cannot think of any provision in law upon which Wilhelm would have to be given up."

Starving Nation.

Asked if he took an optimistic view of the future, Ebert replied: "Certainly, as far as possible for a government which has taken over such an inheritance, and finds itself placed before such a terrible tangled situation. You must remember that our influence upon the course of events is limited. We cannot create bread for the German people. If the nation is allowed to starve then the inevitable will follow. That a nation can be brought to such a desperate pass that it bursts through all restraints is shown by the experiences of the past year. Such people finally revenge themselves upon the authors of their miseries. Our old system came to the ground finally as a result of Russian events which it had itself provoked. It is poor consolation, however, in falling oneself, that one drags one's enemy to the ground also. To us any other solution would be preferable."

Canadian Press:::

LONDON, Dec. 17.— Responsibility for punishing the former German Emperor and other high German officials for crimes committed during the war must rest with governments and not with jurists, according to the Marquis of Crewe, colonial secretary, in a letter published in the Westminster Gazette.

School Children Address Soldiers' and Workmen's Council at Reichstag.

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, Dec. 17.—Several hundred boys and girls carrying red flags and placards paraded through the streets of the city to-day on their way to the Reichstag building, where the Soldiers' and Workmen's Congress is being held. They demanded, among other things, votes for persons 18 years of age, abolition of corporal punishment in schools, and participation by the children in administration of government and schools. A 17 year old lad made an address warning the Executive committee of the "terrible consequences" if the juvenile programme is not carried out. Youthful orators demanded the removal of Premier Ebert and Philip Scheidemann, and opposed the convening of the National Assembly.

Political Chaos Sweeps Germany

The Soviets of the Entire Country Will Meet on Monday—The Junkers Under Control.

THE BOLSHEVISTS

By Frank J. Taylor,
(United Press.)

BERLIN, Dec. 17.—Germany is groping in a political semi-chaos. She can be compared to a huge industry from which the owners have removed, leaving the workers in control. Every department is running without orders, seemingly from force of habit, while self-delegated leaders cautiously attempt to organize things.

The greatest hopes are centred in last week's developments. The Soviets of the entire country will meet Monday, while the Reichstag will be convened later in respones to the call of its president, Fehrenbach. The people hope and expect that both meetings will pledge their undivided support of the Ebert Haase government, which is regarded as the leading factor for a Soviet republic. Such support, it is believed, will enable the People's Council to call a Constituent Assembly before the extended armistice expires on Jan. 17th. The public seems to be entirely behind the Socialist Republican party, which includes the majority Socialists under Chancellor Ebert and Philip Scheidemann, combined with the minority Socialists under Hugo Haaze, Wilhelm Ditmann and Richard Barth.

The Junkers.

The Junkers party appears to be completely submerged. The general opinion is that the Junkers hope to retain enough land to provide an income that will enable them to retire, and that they are willing to give up participation in the government to accomplish this.

The Spartacus group, led by Karl Leibknecht, represents an element that is numerically weak, but is noisy and makes trouble. They favour the setting up of an entirely "Social" government, which would be practically Bolshevik in practice. Their ranks are being dangerously increased, however, by recruits from among discharged soldiers and the rapidly growing army of unemployed Germans, encouraged by the Bolsheviks.

Three Distinct Parties.

Canadian Press:

LONDON, Dec. 17.— Some light on the muddled political situation in Germany may be gained by analysis of the revolutionary forces now at work.

There are three distinct parties contesting for supremacy, Social Democrats, Independent Socialists and Spartacus or Bolshevist group.

Social Democrats are the old Scheidemann party. Throughout the war they worked hand in hand with the so-called "middle class" non-Socialist parties. When the revolution occurred they wished to continue this co-operation and established a coalition government, representing the old Reichstag coalition majority. They may be called the "extreme right" or Conservative element of the revolutionary movement.

A Compromise.

But owing to the opposition their programme encountered, a compromise was made with their chief rivals, Independent Socialists, led by Hugo Haas, George Ledebour and Carl Kautsky can be termed the "centre" part. The "extreme left" is a mysterious Spartacus group, formed in the fall of 1916. It gets its name from anonymous political letters signed "Spartacus," which were sent out by Karl Liebknecht for personal information of the radical element by Social Democrats.

The group is the German equivalent of the Russian Bolshevists. More or less allied with the Spartacusts are two other extremely radical groups. "Internationale" and "International Socialists of Germany." Julian Borchard is believed to be leader of the International Socialists of Germany, but the group has not figured apparently, in the revolution up to this time.

Demand Action.

The great mass of the Berliners, as well as other Germans are holding back, impatiently expecting the development of the necessary support of a Provisional government with a constitution that would enable them to participate in political affairs. The Bourgeoisie and the newspapers demand stronger action from Ebert and Haase, but probably would support any government capable to insuring peace, order and food.

The revolution seems to have eliminated the word "Verboten" from the German language. There is an atmosphere of lack of restraint wherever one goes. Everyone is disposed to do just as he pleases.

The recent disorders in which Spartacus forces clashed with Government troops, have entirely disappeared. There is still an occasional "free for all" between the rival factions, but there is no shooting and the damage usually is limited to a few black eyes and broken noses.

Americans In Germany

Not a Precedent in History for the Occupation of Rhineland.

By Webb Miller.
(United Press.)

WITH THE AMERICANS ACROSS THE RHINE, Dec. 17. —The Third Army now occupies a strip of Germany containing more than 4,500 square miles. It is supervising the administration of several hundred villages and operating hundreds of miles of railways and street car lines. The methodical taking over of this tremendous responsibility, with the multitudinous details of governing hundreds of the thousands of hostile people, was almost entirely accomplished within fifteen days.

There is no precedent in history for this occupation, which is also remarkable in that it was finished without a single serious hostile demonstration, either in the habitants or the troops.

An army of 250,000 men marched between 200 and 300 miles within a month, starting almost immediately after weeks of the hardest kind of fighting. In the last six weeks men and officers have undergone probably the most severe physical test that any American army has ever experienced.

Mr. F. J. A. Morris' Lecture Published By Teachers

At the Teacher's Convention held in Peterborough on October last, Mr. F. J. A. Morris of the Collegiate Institute Staff, read a paper on "Man'c Alitude to Nature."

The paper was so interesting and instructive that the teachers unanimously requested that it be printed.

This has been carried out by the teachers and the address has been issued in pamphlet form.

The number of copies is limited but any one interested in the subject may secure a copy at the Trebilcock Book Store. The price is 10c.

REV. T. T. SHIELDS, D.D., BRINGS BACK A WONDERFUL MESSAGE FROM WAR-TORN EUROPE

KING GEORGE TAKES IN SHOW

LONDON, Dec. 17. — (Correspondence of Associated Press.)— Until armistice week King George had not been inside a theatre since the outbreak of the war, and not partaken of intoxicants since 1915. On the night of the signing of the armistice he had champagne with his dinner, and after perusing a long list of theatrical attractions he selected something lively, one of the most popular "girl" shows, which he seemed to enjoy.

Says Wilson Not Invited

Michigan Clergyman Refers to His Pro-German Programme at Pastors' Meeting.

William H. Hobbs, professor of geology at the University of Michigan, speaking before the Pastors' Club in Detroit last week, threw that body into an uproar by his bitter reference to President Wilson and his peace programme. Decorum was thrown to the winds and the men of the cloth forgot their dignity in their heated protests.

The speaker also alleged that President Wilson was going to the peace table an an uninvited guest, stating that there was no evidence of his having been asked to come.

Mr. Hobbs stated that a "despatch had slipped into the news from Washington that Mr. Wilson was responding to an invitation from the allied Governments to attend the peace conference," but although he had wired the head of the Associated Press, who is a personal friend, for confirmation, he had received no reply.

Professor Hobbs opened his attack with a reference to President Wilson's "somewhat Oriental trip to Europe to dominate the peace table just at the time when the head of the country was needed at home."

He declared that if we were going abroad to dominate we should have a record of sacrifices, and that the original one hundred thousand casualties had been increased to 236,000 to make a better showing.

'Even our one great feat of transporting men was not accomplished by the administration," he said, "but by the French and British ships, which transported 60 per cent. of the American soldiers to Europe.

"It is inconceivable that the Premiers had invited Wilson, as they are opposed to his pro-German programmes."

When reference was made to President Wilson's pro-German programme, Rev. James Chapman indignantly took exception. Rev. Joseph A. Vance said: "I seriously object to this association being used in any sense for partisan purposes."

The meeting was thrown into discord.

The president stated that the "two men had lost their heads," and that it was discourteous to Professor Hobbs, after inviting him, and that in refusing to hear him out the association would itself be partisan. He said that the audience need not sponsor Professor Hobbs' sentiments.

Raising Money For Indemnities

Two Loans Are Proposed—Large Sums For Demobilization.

Special to The Examiner:

COPENHAGEN, Dec. 17.—Germany already is taking steps to raise money for the war indemnities which the Allies are expected to demand.

The German government's new taxations programme, according to reports received here to-day, includes two loans. One will provide funds for the indemnities. The amount to be asked has not been decided upon. The other will cover the cost of demobilization.

Large sums, it is said, will be expended in peace work, including the employment of discharged soldiers.

St. Paul's Church Was Crowded Capacity to Hear Gifted Speaker—Uncle Sam is a Great Advertiser.

FREEDOM OF THE SEAS

Rev. T. T. Shields, D.D. of Jarvis Street Baptist Church, Toronto, who spoke at St. Paul's Presbyterian Church last evening delivered one of the most inspiring and instructive addresses heard in this city for some time. The large audience sat enraptured for over an hour, listening to his experiences not only on the western front but in the great manufacturing centres of England and of Ireland. In his discourse he touched on the Hun barbarities, the great throbs of the British Empire, the British navy, that silent but potent factor in the winning of the war, the much-discussed phrase "Freedom of the Seas," Ireland both economically and politically, the feelings of the populace in London, and in Manchester when it was known that the armistice had been signed, the Lord Mayor's show in London and the great procession held in Paris celebrating the liberation of Alsace-Lorraine. These and many other subjects comprised his speech "The Sword of Victory."

Mr. Kenner Presided

Mr. H. R. H. Kenner, principal of the Collegiate Institute was the chairman for the evening. The lady members of the choir dressed in white acted as ushers while with the male members of the choir they sang patriotic airs.

Dr. Shields was asked to speak in St. Paul's Church not only that the citizens could be allowed to hear one who has been up and down the front line trenches under the auspices of the British Government but to raise funds to build a fitting memorial to the heroes of the great war who have gone from St. Paul's Church—150 of them, of whom 18 will not return.

It was an inspiring message, told in a straightforward matter-of-fact way.

Dr. Shields crossed the seas four months ago and came back to the country less than three weeks ago. "When the U-boats of tyranny were in safe custody, in better condition than they ever were before."

Dr. Shields then described how half the world was running to Germany for "kultur" before the war while all the time the Fatherland was aiming at the mastery of the world. Germany went through Belgium leaving it a waste, a trail of ruined cities, defiled temples and millions of souls with indignation in their hearts.

Hun Atrocities.

"I travelled with a British officer," continued the speaker, "one of the old contemptibles who was in the great retreat from Mons and had to be taken prisoner as La Bassee where he had been bayoneted in the foot and shot through the lung. He was made to walk at the point of a bayonet by the Germans. In a German hospital, part of one of his lung and three ribs were removed without an anaesthetic while German students stood round. I have learned that the barbarities of the Hun in Belgium and the cruel mutilation of their prisoners is mild compared with the fiendishness of a German camp commandant. They studied bestiality, how to break the spirit and drive to despair. One British officer, taken prisoner with a broken leg was left alone and his leg rotted off and he states positively that his nurse three times deliberately infected the wound. Another woman waved the copy of a German newspaper in his face describing the sinking of the Lusitania.

"That is what the Fatherland is going to do with all England," she said.

On the Western Front

I have been, over all, devastated parts of France, at Bethune, Peronne and Albert. I have seen numberless villages where there is not only not a stone left upon a stone but where there is not a stone or a brick. Everything is absolutely pulverized.

John Bull and Sons

After a consulation John Bull and Sons have decided to continue in business for the present and be still going strong. This would be an uncomfortable world to live in if John Bull and Co. retired from business.

The loans of the British to her allies exceed seven billions of dollars. When Uncle Sam came into the war with full pockets and plenty of money in the bank you patted him on the back but it may not be known to you that Uncle Same did not loan a single dollar until they got John Bull's gold nature to the note.

Nearly Self-Supporting.

England has made herself self-supporting for 40 weeks out of 52 weeks in the year and an army of 2,000,000 women are tilling the soil.

THE WAR VETERANS.

The annual report presented by Secretary Whatley at the meeting of the ...at War Veterans' Association last ...ht, gave facts and figures about ...operations of that body that amply ...tify the organization of the G.W. ...A. and that should do much to dis...ate the erroneous idea that the prin...al aim of the Veterans is to have ...fortably furnished quarters for re...ation and social enjoyment. True, ...se facilities are needed and should ...supplied, but the main aims of the ...r Veterans go far beyond social ...ctions. There is a great work to be ...e in looking after the interests of ...rmed men, in adjusting matters of ..., and pensions, in assisting those ...o are in distress, in seeing that the ...ves and children of fallen com...es are looked after. The need of ...s work is shown in the annual re...rt which quotes some specimen cas... of the manner in which the Can...an pension system is administered. ...e Veterans have a pension commit... which forms a connecting link be...een the discharged soldier who is ...t satisfied with the award that has ...en made in his case and the Pen...ns Board and since its inception ...s been successful in securing a re...justment in a number of cases. The ...ures quoted as to the amount of ...ief given and as to the total value ...re-adjustments achieved by the ...erans show to what extent the work ...the Association has developed. The report deprecates any Bolshevik tendencies on the part of returned men—the language used leaving no doubt as to the desire of the Great Veterans to be a sane, useful body of men whose desire is not only to see that all returned men are given a square deal but to be of assistance in the development of Canada on bigger, broader lines.

LEADERSHIP NEEDED.

Some of our citizens who are being asked to become candidates at the coming elections may not see much that is pleasant in the vision of municipal government as it presents itself to their eyes. The ingratitude of the public for services rendered, the loss of time, the sacrifice of pleasures in order to do one's best for the city, all these things loom up as warning signals before many citizens who might do admirable work in the Council. For those who are hesitating on this account, inspiration might be found in the spirit shown by the soldiers from Peterborough who, although they visioned the dangers and hardships and sufferings that lay in wait for them, brushed them to one side to answer the call for service. The disagreeable features of military life they saw but disregarded in their desire to fight for what they knew was a right and just cause. Such a spirit should not only inspire our citizens, to whom the call has come, to unhesitatingly place their talents at the service of their fellow citizens, but should lead to the resolve that our returning soldiers shall be brought back to a different Peterborough than the one they left—to a new, progressive community, governed in the best interests of all the people, with a civic government that will supply the necessary leadership for all worthy movements. That is what we have lacked in Peterborough—leadership. We have not done all we should have done for our returned soldiers for instance. Why? because the people of Peterborough are unappreciative and indifferent and heartless? No; because there has been no direction for the patriotic impulses of our people. The City Council, which should have set the example for the rest of the community, failed to do so—in fact went to the other extreme. This lack of leadership has made itself felt in other matters of the same kind, just as on the other hand the aggressive war-time policy of the municipal authorities in Toronto has set the pace for patriotic endeavours to such an extent that the Queen city has gained and earned the title of the most patriotic city in Canada. People of Toronto are no more patriotic than the citizens of Peterborough—the difference in the showing is the difference in the leadership supplied by the civic authorities.

NO CONSCRIPTION.

One of the policies to which Lloyd George and his cabinet are committed is the universal abolition of military conscription. A few days ago the premier announced that the British delegates at the peace conference will use all their influence to bring about the abolition of conscription in Europe. Yesterday in an election speech he said that he and his colleagues favour the abolition of conscription in all lands.

Undoubtedly the system of universal national conscription is a perpetual menace to the world's peace. If one great nation resorts to it, and by that means maintains a huge standing army in peace time, neighbouring nations must in self-defence resort to the same policy. An increase in the standing army of one nation means corresponding increases in the standing armies of neighbouring nations, and militarism thus gains sway.

International conditions which require nations to keep themselves armed to the teeth in self-defence are not healthy conditions, any more than the conditions in a city which make it necessary for each householder to barricade his windows and keep a loaded rifle ready for use can be regarded as normal and healthy. The only way to make conditions normal as between nations is to remove the cause of danger, and the danger is the maintenance of great standing armies by means of conscription.

Enforced military training for all the able-bodied men of a nation is another thing. There would be put little danger in the adoption of some such national system of defence as the Swiss system. But Lloyd-George is right in regarding the policy of universal long-term military service enforced by conscription as being the chief enemy of peace. How to do away with it is another question. It must be by general agreement.—Hamilton Herald.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Hundreds of Peterborough children whose fathers are overseas will, thanks to the Great War Veterans' Association and the citizens who have subscribed towards the Christmas treat, have a memorable time at the armouries Saturday. It is a splendid movement and the interest the citizens have displayed in it will be appreciated by all friends of Peterborough's soldiers.

The United Farmers of Ontario have thrown their hat in the ring in North Ontario by placing a candidate in the field. The Ontario government, remembering the results of the last two by-elections, will be pardoned for not growing very enthusiastic over the news.

The Allies are seizing the German shipping to carry food to the German people. It is a business-like way of dealing with the problem.

The weather man has qualified as the premier fuel controller.

The people of Cologne, reading the British proclamations setting forth the regulations under which martial law is to be carried out, will have difficulty in believing Herr Erbert's boast that the German army has not been defeated.

Canada's blinded soldiers — who number in all about eighty men—have petitioned the government for a gift of 320 acres of homestead land. The request should be granted as soon as possible.

Cold Welcome Given Canadians

But Germans Well Disciplined and Show Deference to Officers and British Flag.

LONDON, Dec. 16. — Canadian troops entering Germany are being received with cold politeness by the inhabitants, who seem surprised to be treated so considerately. They show naturally enough that the Canadians are not wholly welcome visitors, but being such well-disciplined people they obey implicitly what is required of them.

At every town and village the inhabitants are required to deliver up every kind of firearm. Our correspondent saw at Scleiden, where the Canadian Corps' Headquarters is established, a German policeman making a house to house collection of weapons. His arms were full of swords of ancient vintage, taking them to the priests' houses where they will be stored till further orders.

Soldiers Come in at All Hours

Three Arrived in the City Yesterday.

It is very difficult to get the time definitely that soldiers from overseas can be expected in the city. Thus, the names of eighteen returning soldiers were published as likely to arrive last evening, whereas only three of the eighteen came in on the trains. No longer are the discharged soldiers detrained at Kingston when coming in from Halifax and other ports of debarkation. Trains are made up and filled with soldiers from a particular district which goes direct to the headquarters of that district. In this way some of the Peterborough boys are entrained for Toronto and have to come back from there to Peterborough. Some of them manage to get off at Cobourg or some of the lake-shore towns.

Victoria Cross For a Canadian

Pte. Munney Saved a Critical Situation.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, Dec. 17.—Private Z. J. P. Nunney, D.C.M.M.M., 38th Battalion, Eastern Ontario Regiment, is granted a Victoria Cross, according to the London Gazette, for most conspicuous bravery, during the operations against the Drocourt-Queant line on September 1 and 2, 1918. On September 1, when his battalion was in the vicinity of Vice and Artoi, preparatory to attacking, the enemy laid down a heavy barrage and counter attacked. Nunney, who at this time was at company headquarters, immediately on his own initiative, proceded through the barrage to the company outpost lines, going from post to post, encouraging the men by his own fearless example. The enemy were repulsed and a critical situation saved. During the attack of September 2, his dash continually placed him in advance of his companions. His fearless example undoubtedly helped greatly to carry the company forward to its objectives. He displayed throughout the highest degree of valor until severely wounded.

ADDRESS ON METHODS OF SEWAGE DISPOSAL

Representatives of the municipalities of the city, North Monaghan and Otonabee, are expected to attend the meeting of the Engineers' Club in the Public Library hall to-night to hear Prof. Gillespie's address on "The Methods of Sewage Disposal." Mayor Duncan and members of the Council, Warden Anderson, Reeve John McIntosh, and others have been invited. The subject is of special interest and is particularly timely in view of the injunction that hangs over the city demanding an outfall sewage plant which, it has recently been said, must be built next year.

Special to The Examiner:

MELBOURNE, Dec. 17.— A three-day programme of celebration in Austria upon official declaration of peace has been agreed upon.

FREIGHT TRAINS ARE SIDETRACKED WHILE TROOPS COME HOME

A procesion of troop trains from Atlantic ports has tied up the regular freight business on the main line of the Grand Trunk Railway during the past 24 hours so completely that traffic was temporarily abandoned until the specials had passed through. Seven east bound trains lost an aggregate of 43 hours and eleven westbound lost 53 hours in the vicinity of Belleville last night and this morning. The railways apparently decided that nothing should be allowed to obstruct the return journey of the soldiers as they reached their homes, and the freights were run into sidings and told to stay there until the last of the troop trains from the Olympic had gone through.

The men for the western provinces, it is said, had gone over the main line through Ottawa and North Bay, but the soldiers for London, Toronto and other districts were brought in over the G. T. R., whose double track enabled the most complete facilities to be provided for this big return movement.

The Belleville sidings were packed with trains and parts of trains, and the lost time would pile up a nice bill for the company. In these days train crews are paid in full for each working hour, whether the wheels move or not.

Rain Interfered With President's Game of Golf

By Robt. Bender.
(United Press.)

PARIS, Dec. 17.—A heavy rain necessitated calling off President Wilson's projected trip to the Marne battle field to-day. It also prevented the President and Rear Admiral Grayson from playing golf at St. Cloud, which had been planned for six a.m.

The President rose later than usual and expected to spend most of the day indoors. This afternoon he will confer separately with Edwin Hurley, Marshal Foch and Italian Ambassador Cellere, the latter presumably about the details of the trip to Rome. To-night the Wilsons, Poincares and about fifty distinguished Frenchmen and Americans will be the guests of Ambassador and Mrs. Sharp at dinner. A reception will follow.

Toys Were Made in Peterboro

RETURNED SOLDIER FINDS A NEW REVENUE FOR EMPLOYMENT.

A few months ago a man from Peterboro left his home and little family to offer his services overseas. While he was gone the government looked after his family, but with the fortunes of war the father was hit and returned paralyzed, to the city, to exist on a small pension. While the pension was sufficient to keep the wolf from the door it did not allow for any Christmas celebration for his kiddies, so as a solution to the puzzle of what to do, he manufactured the first "made in Peterboro" toys—boxes of little lead soldiers, dear to the heart of every small boy.

With his customary generosity Mr. Hodgins, of the J. C. Turnbull Company, gave the crippled soldier room in "Toyland," the top story of the Turnbull building, and there they are attracting a good deal of attention from citizens who are patriotic enough to help a soldier and at the same time get a suitable present for the little ones.

Ladies' Aid Held Successful Bazaar

Lakefield Soldier Heard From.

LAKEFIELD, Dec. 17.—The Ladies' Aid of the Methodist church cleared $75 at their bazaar on Friday afternoon. This was most gratifying and shows that Friday the thirteenth was lucky after all in spite of bad weather. Among those who assisted were Mrs. Spence, Mrs. Ingram, Mrs. W. Kemp, Mrs. S. Pearson, Mrs. Nixon, Mrs. McConkey, Mrs. Burke, Mrs J. R. Robinson, Mrs. F. H. Richardson, Mrs. Burke and Mrs. R. Nugent.

Mr. K. S. Madill presided at the piano and played acceptably during the afternoon.

Letter From Soldier.

Miss Margaret Sullivan received the following letter the other day from a friend of her brother Pte. William Sullivan. Pte. Sullivan was very badly wounded a couple of months ago, and as his right arm is still helpless he is unable to write himself.

Courage Ward,
Bethual Green Military Hospital,
London, Eng., 21/11/18.

Dear Miss Sullivan,— Just a few lines on behalf of your brother Willie, who is lying in bed next to myself. This is his ninth week in this hospital and he is getting on fine now. He got rather more than his share of a 'Blighty,' being wounded in back, legs and both arms, but the only wound that troubles him is the one in the right arm, which went through the elbow, and he is likely to have a stiff arm for some time to come.

He was up for the first time Tuesday afternoon and again yesterday afternoon, sitting round the fire. Yesterday was his first attempt to walk and he got along quite all right, but was a little lame, but once he gets moving round a while he will soon lose his lameness. He says to expect him home about February, but that's just a rough calculation as it all depends on how soon he can get around. He is sure of making home, that's a great consolation.

He has written to his brother Dennie to come to see him, but he has not turned up.

This is about all the news he can think of this time, so will close by sending you all his Christmas greeting.

Your sincerely,
R. J. GILLIES.

WILSON HONOURED.

President is Made an Honorary Member of Milan Academy of Science.

Special to The Examiner:

MILAN, Dec. 17.—President Wilson has been proclaimed an honorary member of the Academy of Science.

Rev. T. T. Shields, D.D., Brings Back a Message

ering an area seven and a half miles long there are 90,000 people employed. That is more than Wellington had under his command at the battle of Waterloo.

From one of the highest munition authorities in the Empire I was told that despite the tremendous output of Canada and United States in the way of munitions that the British Isles, all themselves produced 82½ per cent. of all the munitions used in the war. United States and Canada produced only 17½ per cent. But they didn't publish it. John Bull is a poor advertiser.

The Navy.

I visited the Grand Fleet, saw the "Lion" which has been officially sunk (in the German report) four times.

Freedom of Seas.

I don't see a possibility of Great Britain losing the supremacy of the seas. During the war 21 dreadnoughts were added to the fleet or an addition greater than the whole German navy. The tonnage was increased from two and a half millions to eight million tons. The navy is immeasurably superior to all the navies of the world put together. There are two million Americans in France. Do you know how they got there? When there were one million nine hundred thousand Americans in France, one million one hundred thousand were carried in British ships.

No Dictation.

"The freedom of the seas is an old phrase but be sure that the British navy will do in the next war, if cursed withanother one, pretty much as she has done in this war, and, be sure that nobody will dictate to her concerning her fleet."

Ireland

Dr. Shields went on a two weeks visit to Ireland. He saw the immense factories and shipyards in Belfast and the whole of north Ireland humming with war industry. He had heart-to-heart talks with Dillon and Tim Healey and the President and Secretary of the Sinn Fein.

Armistice Celebrations

"I was in London when the armistice was signed and saw the immense crowds which converged on Buckingham Palace to cheer the Sovereign I was in Paris at the celebration of the restoration of Alsace-Lorraine when the Strassbourg statue, in he Place de la Concorde, which has been veiled for 45 years was unveiled. There were 250 Canadian soldiers in this parade who planted the only Canadian ensign that they could find on the biggest German gun."

"By the way," continued the speaker, "there was hardly a Canadian flag in Paris that day while the buildings were literally draped with the stars and stipes. Why? Because Unce Sam shipped them over in shiploads and if you could not pay for one you got it for nothing. I tell you if John Bull had Uncle Sam as advertising manager he would do a roaring business.

Mons.

Dr. Shields was in Mons after the armistice was signed. He met Canadian prisoners who had already escaped from Germany. At Brussels he witnessed the entry of King Albert and the Royal family into the city when every Belgian's eyes were dimmed with tears. They could hardly believe that the terrible German nightmare was over.

NEW OFFICERS ARE INSTALLED BY G.W.V.A.

Will Take Office at the Beginning of the Year—Candidates for Municipal Positions Are to be Pledged as to Permanent Quarters.

Candidates for the municipal council will be asked to state just where they stand in regard to permanent quarters for the G.W.V.A., and also in regard to a memorial for Peterborough's dead soldiers, as a result of a resolution passed at the regular meeting of the Peterborough Branch of the Great War Veterans' Association last night. The resolution, drafted by a committee composed of Comrades Hughes, Ringer and Payne, pointed out that the speedy return from overseas of hundreds of comrades rendered larger quarters necessary as soon as possible, and called for the appointment of a committee to co-operate with the Ladies' Auxiliary in pledging all aspirants for the council in regard to this matter.

President H. J. Staunton occupied the chair at last night's meeting, and there was a large attendance of members.

Five applications for membership were read, and on motion the candidates were admitted. All five were men who had seen service in France, and had but recently returned.

On a ballot being taken Comrade Walter Hughes was elected to represent the G.W.V.A. on the executive of the Children's Aid Society, the latter having asked that a member of the G. W.V.A. should be appointed to the executive of the organization.

Comrades Thos. Williams and T. R. Cooper were chosen as the representatives of the Great War Veterans on the executive of the Peterborough Branch of the Patriotic Fund.

A request from the Salvation Army that the War Veterans should assist in the Red Shield Drive for funds for the Salvation Army war work, was referred to the executive committee with power to act.

The annual report of Secretary Whatley will appear to-morrow.

As last night's was the final regular meeting of the year, the newly elected officers for 1919 were installed by the retiring president, Comrade H. J. Staunton. The new officers are:

President—Comrade Capt. A. S. Morrison.

1st Vice-President— Comrade Dr. Ed. H. Wood.

2nd Vice-President—Comrade R. H. Muir.

Secretary—Comrade Sidney Whatley.

Treasurer—Comrade Geo. R. Coleman.

Sergt.-at-Arms—Comrade W. Cole.

Executive Committee — Comrades Capt. R. E. Layfield, Fred Long, T. J. Cooper, Harry Yates and Fred Dainton.

On motion the retiring president was made a member of the executive committee, ex-officio, and it was decided that this practice should be carried out each year in order that the new officers might have the benefit of the experience and advice of the retiring president.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the retiring officers on their faithful services to the Association during the year. President-elect Morrison and other of the new officers addressed the meeting appealing for the hearty support and co-operation of all the members in the coming year.

The meeting adjourned with the singing of O Canada and the National Anthem.

Ald. A. McIntyre is Bereaved

Son Passes Away Yesterday at Long Branch Camp.

Cadet Sidney McIntyre, R.A.F., second son of Ald. A. A. McIntyre, 559 Aylmer street, passed away at the Long Branch, Royal Air Force camp yesterday after a long illness. Cadet McIntyre, who is 28 years of age, has been in the Air Force for considerably over a year, but had not been allowed to go overseas on account of his illness. He had been in the Southern States for nearly five years, but came north to enlist. Only two weeks he was in Peterborough on leave and returned to Toronto to get his discharge. Besides a sorrowing mother and father he leaves to mourn his loss two brothers, Frank and Spence, both of Toronto. He was well known throughout the city, and was a pupil of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute.

The funeral takes place from the family residence, 599 Aylmer street, on Thursday at 2 o'clock to Little Lake cemetery.

Rev. A. J. Thomas, of George Street Methodist Church, will officiate.

Labour Bureau For Peterboro

Office Will be Opened in the Course of a Week.

Mr. George Gillespie, M.P.P., has received word from the Department of Trades and Labour, Toronto, that an employment Bureau will shortly be opened in the city for the benefit of the returning soldiers. An official will come to the city to confer with Mr. Gillespie in the near future, and it is altogether likely that the Bureau will be open in the course of a week.

One Transport is Back in Vancouver

Relatives of Peterborough soldiers in the last contingent of the Siberian Expeditionary forces to leave Vancouver have received telegrams stating that the transport has returned to Canada, and the men who had expected to be in the Orient by this time are wondering what their next move will be. There is an opinion that these men will be sent back east and mustered out. The transport's return may have some other explanation the military authorities are keeping to themselves, but the home folks believe that these boys will not be sent to Siberia now.

Fined $50 for Not Affixing a War Stamp

Case Will Be Referred to the Customs Department.

Mr. Nelson Routly, who owns a grocery store at the corner of Park and Brock streets was fined $50 in police court this morning for failure to put a war stamp on a box of talcum powder. He happened to sell this particular box to a Customs Inspector. Early in the spring Magistrate Dumble handed down a judgment that it was not necessary to put the war stamp on perfumes, under which talcum powder is listed. But an amendment to the Act has been passed by order-in-Council, in which it was made necessary to affix a war stamp to perfumes, and Magistrate Dumble's judgment was reversed. Not knowing this, Mr. Routly discontinued affixing war stamps on talcum powder. The fine will not be paid for ten days in order to allow Mr. J. E. L. Goodwill, who is acting for Mr. Routly, to communicate with the Customs Department regarding the matter.

EXTENSION REACHES SHERBROOKE STREET

The street railway extension on the Monaghan Road reached Sherbrooke street to-day, and is within one block of the proposed temporary terminus at Patterson street. The road has been restored to within one block of the end of the rails, and the workmen have been enabled to build up the bed of the car line and grade the street in spite of the unsatisfactory conditions under which they have been working. The weather has been decidedly favourable for the most part, largely accounting for the progress with which the extension has been pushed ahead.

LISTEN! It's music! It's "Silent night, holy night," it's down stairs, it's a BRUNSWICK

THIS CHRISTMAS WILL HELP YOU STIMULATE YOU, INSPIRE YOU.

You will have a Brunswick, the "Music Master."

From it you will draw a flood of emotion, courage, hope, gladness—all a peace-time Christmas needs. You will find in it all that Christmas stands for, all the world is hoping for, all Canada is fighting for—peace and good-will to men.

Watch your son's face when you play patriotic airs. He is a better Canadian for hearing fine Canadian music.

Watch your daughter's face when you play a love song—she is dreaming dreams of the future.

Watch your wife's face. She has forgotten the worries of every day.

Watch your guests. Their finest selves are revealed in the universal language—Music.

This happiness is not just for to-day, or to-morrow, it is for all the year, all of every year—a happiness that grows with age and understanding.

This will be the remembered Christmas, "the year the Brunswick came," and literally unlocked the gates of all the music in the world, lifted us out of present distractions, inspiring our subconscious selves to higher things.

The Brunswick is the only cosmopolitan phonograph. It has no commercial interest in just a few singers, orchestras, songs. It does not presume to choose your music for you. Yours will be an individual collection, just suited to YOUR family, YOUR needs, YOUR tastes.

There is no barrier between you and the music the Brunswick brings—no annoying scratching, no nasal tone, no sound of the needle travelling over the record. The Brunswick is the natural voice of ANY record—ALL records.

Christmas and music are needed this year as never before—are you and yours to have it?

We invite comparison and would be pleased to have you call for demonstration. Price range from $62.00 up.

Addressed the Brotherhood

Major H. A. Frost Was the Speaker.

At the Trinity Brotherhood meeting on Sunday Major, the Rev. Harry A. Frost, for four years chaplain to the C. E. F. in England, the Mediterranean, and France gave a very interesting and inspiring address speaking on the four great principles viz. Patience, Purpose, Pluck and Perseverance, emphasizing the fact that what these four words stood for had been predominent throughout the struggle in Europe that it had brought to the Allies that victory they so stubbornly fough for.

Co-ordination of such forces could not fail to bring anything but victory in the struggle so recently brought to such a successful issue. The Major continuing also applied the same to individuals in their everyday life, urging upon his hearers the necessity for keeping fit for the time, if ever it should come when they would be needed to co-operate in some enterprise requiring these four great essentials.

The Major's address was not only interesting but very forceful and well merited the best thanks of his audience which was heartily accorded him.

Peter Wright Has Seamen's Message Here on Thursday

Councillor Peter Wright, who is visiting in America as a delegate from the British Seaman's Union, will speak at a public meeting in Peterboro on Thursday night. He is coming to this city as a guest of the Peterboro Club, but arrangements have been made for a public hearing from 8 until 9 p.m., probably in the Collegiate Institute Hall. Mayor Duncan had not secured definite promise of the use of the hall, but it is expected that no previous engagements would interefer. Peter Wright recently thrilled a big Toronto audience with his story, which is understood to be ap appeal first and above all to the workingmen to protect their interests and the fruits of the war by boycotting German-made goods. The Seaman's Union have declared their resolve to refuse to carry German goods for a period of years because of the crimes committed by the Hun "U-boats" upon defenseless seamen during the war.

Knox Church Anniversary Services

Mr. R. J. Soden Contributed to the Programme.

The congregational social held last night in Knox Church Hall, was a complete success. Every chair in the hall was occupied, and the Ladies' Aid have abundant reason to feel proud of the response the congregation and their friends gave to their invitation.

After the dinner, which was prepared and served by the ladies was finished, the tables were taken down and the large company of people present listened to a fine programme. Miss Parker delighted the audience with her splendid readings. Miss White and Miss Buckham won hearty applause for a piano duet. Mr. Asa Huycke was in splendid voice and responded generously to a hearty encore. His piano solo was also much enjoyed. Mr. R. J. Soden read Drummond's "Wreck of the Julia Plante," and for an encore gave "the Fool," by Robert Service. Mr. Fred Hartman, by his songs and clever impersonations, quite captivated the audience. Mr. Fred Humpage and Mr. John Smith were roundly applauded for their respective solos.

A vote of thanks to the artists was proposed by Mr. Malcolm Clark, and enthusiastically adopted. After short speeches by Mrs. Laing, president of the Ladies' Aid; Mr. Robert Mulligan, chairman of the board of managers, and Mr. T. Carpenter, church treasurer, the meeting was brought to a close by the singing of the National Anthem.

DEMOBILIZATION PLANS ENTIRELY TOO SLOW

(Canadian Press.)

MONTREAL, Dec. 17. — Much uneasiness is felt among the Canadian soldiers overseas who contend that the present demobilization plans are entirely too slow, says Major General McRae, the -former Quartermaster General of the Canadian forces, who arrived here from England to-day. McRae says that at the present rate of returning, some of Canada's troops cannot get home for Christmas, 1919, and these men who enlisted for the duration of the war will not be content to remain in Britain and France for the next twelve months. This dissatisfaction, he says, is bound to breed the spirit of Bolshevism, and must be prevented at any cost.

TALES OF THE V. C.

Corp David F. Hunter, Highland Light Infantry—The Seven Heroes of Moeuvres.

By LIEUT. J. P. LLOYD.

German prospects of ultimate victory in the west had never looked brighter than they looked in the early days of last July. They had driven a great wedge into the Allied line at Chateau-Thierry. The British, they imagined had not yet recovered from their hammering in front of Amiens and Hazebrouck.

To complete the tale of disaster, they had planned towards the end of the month to deliver a mighty blow at the bulge of the Lys Salient, which would smash finally the British armies in the north and open for the conquerors a path to Calais.

Then, suddenly, on the 18th of July, Marshal Foch struck. At attack was launched against both shoulders of the Chateau-Thierry Salient. A fortnight later, with the capture of Fismes, the whole salient had been flattened and the castle of German dreams had fallen to the ground.

British soldiers had a large share in the honors of this battle.

British divisions did great things round Marfaux, in the crossinf of the Ardre and the taking of Courton Wood, and, afterwards, on the 1st of August, in the stern struggle for the heights of the Ourcq. Among them were the Scottish Highlanders of the 51st Division, men tried on many a field, and never found wanting. These men had helped to break the Hindenburg line in the battle of Cambrai. At the end of March they had fought against tremendous odds from Boursies to Bapaume. At the beginning of April they helped to stem the tide that flowed down from the Aubers Ridge. Now, in July, they took their place once more in the line near Marfaux, south-west of Rheims.

It was no easy task that confronted them. The country was strange and difficult. Against them were massed the pick of the German divisions, brought there for an intended drive towards Epernay.

The task was difficult, but the Highlanders accomplished it. And the accomplishment was marked by numberless deeds of individual gallantry. One notable example many was the heroic self-sacrifice of Sergeatn John Meikle of the Seaforth Highlanders, who won the Victoria Cross for what he did, but died in the winning of it.

On the 20th of July, near Marfaux his company was held up by machine gun fire from an emplacement 150 yards in front. Sergeant John Meikle, armed only with a revolver and a heavy strick, rose from his place in the line, and ran forward alone across the bare stretch of bullet-swept ground towards the emplacement. By some miracle he reached the place alive, and leapt down boldly over the parapet into the midst of his enemies.

Many of them he killed with his revolver. When that was empty, he laid about him vigorously with his stick. As the Germans came down upon him with the bayonet, the Scotchman felled them one after the other. When they were all dead Sergeant Meikle jumped to the top of the emplacement, waving his stick and shouted to his platoon to advance.

A little while afterwards the progress of the company was again checked by machine-gun fire. Once more Sergeant Meikle staked his own life to save the lives of his men. Snatching up the rifle and bayonet of a dead comrade, he dashed out across the open in full view of the Germans.

The gun's crew shot him dead on the very threshold of the emplacement, but they did not long survive him, for two of his men, who had followed close behind him killed the Germans and destroyed their gun.

Sergeant John Meikle died in the moment of victory but it was such courage as his, multiplied many times, that made victory possible.

General Mangin, in a special Order of the Day, paid a high tribute to the valor of these soldiers, "All you Engish and Scottish troops" he wrote 'have shown the magnificient qualities of your race—namely indomitable courage and tenacity. You have won the admiration of your brothers-in-arms.

DEMOBILIZATION PLANS.

LONDON, ONT., December 16. — President George M. Reid and Major Gordon Ingrim, who were ordered to proceed as a deputation to Ottawa to confer with the Government officials on improved plans for the demobilization of soldiers, have returned with a report that the authorities have matters now under advisement. One of the principal sources of annoyance in London and elsewhere is claimed to be the fact that pension offices, land grant offices, soldiers' aid organizations and other kindred establishments are usually maintained in different buildings. As a result soldiers and their relatives are compelled to spend weary days going from place to place. The recommendation that such activities be concentrated in one building, was favorably looked upon and the scheme is expected to be adopted throughout the country.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture estimates the American potato crop at 390,000,000 bushels, or fifty-two and a half million bushels less than that of last year.

Solicitors Must Be Qualified

Judge Huycke Settles An Interesting Legal Point.

An interesting point has been settled by His Honour Judge Huycke in connection with applications to the Surrogate Court for probate and administration. This was an application for probate where the papers where drawn up by a country conveyancer and it was held by the Judge that the Surrogate Court Rules compelled him to refuse all such applications in future. Papers on application for probate or administration must be prepared, signed and presented by the applicant or his solicitor which in practice means that in all cases the work must be done by a duly qualified solicitor who understands the technicalities involved and is properly trained for such responsible work. It will save trouble and expense on the part of executors and administrators if upon the decease of a testator or intestate they at once consult an experienced solicitor.

Big Business Was Done By the United Farmers

Million-Dollar Turnover is Reported by the U.F.O. Co-operative Company.

SUGAR DEAL FAILED

TORONTO, Dec. 18.— The balance sheet of the United Farmers' Co-operative Co., Ltd., was presented to the shareholders of the company by President R. W. E. Burnaby at yesterday afternoon's session of the convention. Total sales of $1,765,378 were reported and profits of $4,102 with $3,657 to the reserve account.

The report for the year was as follows:

"From a business point of view, the year in many respects has been a difficult one. We have experienced great difficulty in securing many of our chief commodities. Owing to conditions over which we had no control, we have in many cases been to the trouble and expense of making sales and then have been unable to make delivery.

We have delivered in all one hundred cars of coal, fifty of soft and fifty of hard. Before we offered this coal to our clubs, we had assurance from our suppliers that deliveries could and would be made promptly. Most of the soft coal was delivered, but just at the time the hard coal was to be shipped, the United States Government stepped in and took possession of the whole output of the mine for war purposes.

"With Binder Twine, another of our important commodities, we were only able to secure about half of the amount we could have handled and I can assure you what we did handle was secured in a very extraordinary way.

Sugar Deal Failed.

"The sugar situation, too, was a great disappointment. After entailing all the expense of selling over a million pounds, our order for which was accepted by the wholesalers, the Food Controller passed his order regarding sugar and the whole deal fell through.

GRAIN MARKET

Union Stock Yards— Receipts, 40 cars with 573 head of cattle, 39 calves, 733 hogs, and 545 sheep and lambs.

Market was practically steady at Monday's decline, this being variously estimated at from 50 to 75 cents on the general run of medium and mixed butcher cattle. All the choice quality Christmas stuff seems to have been cleared off Monday, yesterday's business consisting mostly of the cleaning up of the held-overs and the small offering of fresh cattle received yesterday.

Hogs are quoted 25c. lower at $18, fed and watered, and $17.25 f.o.b. In order to avoid a good deal of misunderstanding of late as to f.o.b. prices, a difference of 25c. is made between the f.o.b. price and the price paid at country points.

THE WIFE

BY JANE PHELPS

Brian Takes Mollie to the Matinee. Ruth Is There Also.

CHAPTER LXV

Notwithstanding Ruth's diplomacy as regarded her salary raise Brian had not been easy to manage since it happened. At every opportunity he talked of it, accused Ruth of not caring for him because now she earned twice as much as he did: and in every way made things very difficult for her.

It was not that he objected to sharing the comforts her salary enabled them to have; or the outings they, because of it, enjoyed. It was jealousy of her, her capacity to earn.

Ruth hoped he would ignore it after a few days, but in vain. He would say over and over that she earned twice as much as he did. And when she tried to change the tenor of his talk by saying his work was but preparatory to big things in the future, he would sneer, or else grow angry.

The week following her raise had consequently been a hard one. Ruth was worn out physically and mentally. So when Clara Roberts proposed they go to a matinee on Saturday afternoon, Ruth gladly agreed.

Clara had not mentioned her plan until after her husband and Brian had left. At first they spoke of calling them up and asking them to meet them at the theater. Then Clara said:

"I know Kenyon will hate to lose a half day. Let's go by ourselves this time. We'll be at home before they are."

Ruth reluctantly agreed. She well knew that Brian would not hesitate to leave the office had she called him. Yet she also felt that she should not interfere with his business hours.

They were a bit late and the curtain was up, the play commenced, before they found their seats.

During the intermission they amused themselves by lookin around the house, making comments anent the way people were dressed admiring this one, and finding fault good naturedly with some one else.

Suddenly Ruth saw Clara start. She followed her gaze and, yes, it looked like—it was Brian and Mollie King. The curtain just then rose on the second act, leaving the house in darkness, much to Ruth's relief.

Clara never had met Mollie. But what would she think? Ruth felt sure Brian had asked Mollie to the matinee because of the mood he had been in all the week. "Probably she lunched with him too," she thought bitterly. Then, "had I called him up, I should have known."

Clara pretended to be absorbed in the play, but Ruth felt sure she was surreptiously watching her— and also Brian. She saw nothing of what was on the stage, heard nothing of what was said. Her mind was so intent upon finding some way to explain things to Clara Roberts; some excuse for Brian.

But even when the curtain finally rung down on the second act, she had arrived at no decision.

She looked at the program and saw the wait was to be a long one. Would Brian go out to smoke? If he did should she follow him?

Clara tried to appear unconscious and to chatter as usual, but Ruth realized that it was trying and that closely, she saw her eyes turn toward Brian and Mollie, seemingly unable to avoid doing so.

In desperation Ruth finally said: "Why I believe that's Brian over there with Mollie King a great friend of ours. We will wait for them? I should like you to meet her."

"That will be nice. She's very pretty." Clara answered, not at all deceived by Ruth's brave attempt t carry off an uncomfortabe situation.

The last act was short. Brian and Mollie were nearer the stage than were Ruth and Clara, so they waited at the back of the house until they came along.

"Hello, Brian!" Ruth said brightly causing him to turn a startled face in her direction, then to flush deeply. How do you! do Miss King Wasn't the play delightful?" Then, without waiting for a reply from either she presented Mrs Roberts to Mollie.

"I was going to phone you, Brian, that we were also to be at the theater, but didn't get time," she bravely prevaricated. "We might have all sat together."

"I'll leave you now," Mollie King said when they reached the street Ruth was about to tell Brian to accompany her to the car or stage. but she concluded that she had been patient enough, so she said instead:

"Good bye, Miss King; come o Brian, Take Mrs. Roberts and me home in the stage."

Brian hailed a stage, they got in. Repenting her rudeness, Ruth called:

"Come and see us soon, Miss King!" but Mollie either did not hear or scorned to answer.

To-morrow—Brian Apologizes and They Spend a Happy Evening.

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS MAY BE OVERCOME

If you have Catarrhal Deafness or are even just a little hard of hearing or have head noises go to your druggist and get 1 ounce of Parmint (double strength), and add to it ¼ pint of hot water and a little granulated sugar. Take 1 tablespoonful four times a day.

This will often bring quick relief from the distressing head noises. Clogged nostrils should open, breathing become easy and the mucus stop dropping into the throat. It is easy to prepare, costs little and is pleasant to take. Anyone losing hearing or who has Catarrhal Deafness or head noises should give this prescription a trial.

Have YOU any idea what that decision is costing you—even if you live? Of course, if you die the cost is much GREATER.

Read the following facts and then decide for yourself:

The premium you would pay for $1000 of insurance at age 60 WOULD BUY YOU nearly $4000 of insurance at age 21.

The premium you pay for $1000 of insurance at age 50 WOULD BUY YOU nearly $2500 at age 21.

The premium you pay for $1000 of insurance at age 35 WOULD BUY YOU $1440 at age 21.

Besides, while you may be insurable at age 21 you may not be insurable, AT ANY PRICE, at the other ages mentioned.

Karolyi Curse Takes Effect

CONNOISSEURS of curses will admit that the curse imposed upon the House of Hapsburg by the Countess of Karolyi in 1848 was a complete curse, and that it has been fulfilled in a manner that can be claimed for few maledictions. Many times since it was uttered has it been recalled as one by one the calamities called down upon the head of Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria were fulfilled, and now with the collapse of the dual monarchy, the disappearance of the children of the last emperor and the possibility that some such fate may overtake the survivors of the Austrian royal family as befell the Romanoffs, it is brought once more to our minds. In Austria it has had for fifty years almost the force of an unwritten law. Every Austrian and Hungarian had heard of it. Many of them agreed that what was said was well said, and thought the words had almost the authority of a scriptural passage. History has shown that when for any reason one of the evils spoken for the Hapsburgs seemed for some reason slow in arriving there never lacked hot-headed patriots to hasten the desired event.

At the age of 18, Francis Joseph had the responsibility of dealing with the Hungarian rebellion which aimed to set up Hungary as an independent nation. He dealt with the ringleaders when they fell into his hands with great severity. They were hanged or shot. One of them was a son of the Countess Karolyi, whose grandson, by the way, is now the acknowledged leader of the Hungarians. The words of the countess directed against the young emperor were as follows: "May heaven and hell blast his happiness! May his family be exterminated! May he be smitten in the persons of those he loves! May his life be wrecked and may his children be brought to ruin." And so, since 1848, it has come to pass. If the aged countess could be alive to-day she would be entitled to claim that she had made a good job of the cursing, and would no doubt take pride in the fact that her grandson is now a more important figure in the nation than the emperor, and that those of her blood have done something to bring about the final downfall of the once haughty House of Hapsburg.

When the Empress Elizabeth, wife of Francis Joseph, was assassinated, a Vienna newspaper boldly recounted some of the misfortunes that had fallen upon the Hapsburgs. "On Jan. 30, 1889," it said, "Crown Prince Rudolph took his own life in his hunting box at Meyerling. In May, 1897, Sophie, Duchess d'Alencon, at one time the affianced bride of Ludwig II. of Bavaria, was burned to death in Paris. On June 16, 1867, the Emperor Maximilian of Mexico, the emperor's brother-in-law, was shot by a firing party at Queretaro. His consort, the Belgian Princess Marie Charlotte, lost her reason, and has been for the last thirty years under restraint at the Chateau of Bouchout. Archduke William Francis Charles died in the summer of 1894, at Baden, near Vienna, from injuries sustained through a fall from his horse. Archduke John of Tuscany, who resigned his rank and had taken the name of John Orth, disappeared on the high seas off the coast of South America. King Ludwig II. of Bavaria, the empress' cousin, committed suicide on June 13, 1836, in the Lake of Starnberg in a fit of insanity. Count Ludwig of Train, Prince of the Two Sicilies, husband of Duchess Matilda, in Bavaria, the sister of the empress, committed suicide at Zurich. Archduchess Matilda, daughter of Field Marshal Archduke Albert, was burned to death in her father's palace as a result of a blazing log from the fire having set alight her ball dress. Ladislas, son of Archduke Joseph, came to grief while hunting by an accidental discharge of his gun."

Later historians have had to chronicle the assassination of Archduke Francis Ferdinand on June 28, 1914, which was seized upon by Austria and Germany as the excuse for the present war. The old emperor himself died in his bed long years after life had ceased to hold out to him any pleasures or satisfactions. His empire has been scattered to the winds, and it is certain that the Hapsburg family will disappear from among the rulers of mankind. Whether anything less disastrous to Austria might have happened under rulers other than the Hapsburgs is a matter for speculation. Had it not been for the war it seems altogether likely that Austria and Hungary would still have separated at some time in the near future. Indeed, for many years the belief that the death of Francis Joseph would dissolve the bond holding the dual monarchy together was held by European statesmen. The emperor himself was sincerely liked and pitied for his misfortunes. It was admitted on all hands that he was a better ruler than his heir promised to make. The Archduke Francis Ferdinand was thoroughly Germanized, which by no means endeared him to the Hungarians, among whom was a considerable party of Independents, who never abandoned their ideal of complete separation from Austria. Now they have got their separation, but it is not so sweet as they had expected, for it deprives the Hungarians of the right to oppress smaller nationalities within the new republic, and, as has been noted, the Hungarians were as brutal oppressors as the Prussians. They have been saved from Austria and several millions of non-Magyars have been saved from them.

Are Your Pulley Problems Well in Hand?

Have you reduced "belt slip" and weight-friction to a minimum? Can you show, despite increased price of coal, that your power bills are less, because you are getting more results from each unit? Many Superintendents are showing these results to-day, because they are replacing metal pulleys by Dodge Wood-Split Pulleys.

$10.00 per pulley per year is the smallest average saving of power costs by such replacements.

This is a big claim, but it has been proven over and over again. Write for more information.

42nd Annual Meeting St. Paul's Women's Missionary Society

Annual Report Indicates Satisfactory Progress Throughout the Year — Address by Returned Missionary.

The 42nd Annual Meeting of St. Paul's Women's Missionary Society was held on Friday afternoon last in the lecture room. In spite of the unfavorable weather there was a good attendance including a number of visitors from the churches. Miss Dickson presided and conducted the devotional exercises and in her annual address referred to the great pleasurre it had ben for her to serve the auxiliary as its president for 25 years

The financial statement presented by Mrs. McKee shows the year's total receipts to be $2,110.40.

The repport of the Fraser Mission Band read by Mrs. LeClair shows a balance of $365.35 to their credit.

The Faithful Workers' Mission Band report read by Miss Porteous shows year's receipts to be $131.

Miss MacGillioray of Shanghai gave a splendid address telling of the changed lives of the Chinese women under Christian influence and urged young women to coniseder the devoting their lives to missionary work.

The Annual Report

To the President and members of St. Paul's women's Missionary Society the following report is submitted:

Before reviewing the work of the past year in our 42nd annual report, I should like to record in this report "that our hearts are filled with a deep joy, owing to the coming of peace." "The day" we have waited and prayed for during more than four years of war causing sorrow, desolation and bloddshed, never before equalled. The last half of the year 1918 will stand out pre-eminently when the history of the war is written, as the period when a cruel, treacherous foe, flushed with success, confident of victory was met and swept steadily back to surrender and defeat. In a spirit of thanksgiving and gratitude to God we humbly declare, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto Thy name give the praise."

Our work has been unhindered during the past year, the monthly meetings being held as usual on the second Friday of the month, except occasionally when postponement was found to be necessary.

A Decrease

We regret to report a decrease in our membership also in our average attendance, the average being 44 out of a membership of 117. We do not wish to believe this is owing to indifference or lack of interest, but rather that the insistent calls for all forms of war activities have made great demands on our time, but as these calls cease shall we not as members of this auxiliary resolve to carry on to the end in the world-wide conflict between right and wrong, good and evil, showing the same splendid spirit of devotion and sacrifice.

A meeting of the Executive was held at the home of Miss Dickson in Januray to appoint a committee to prepare the monthly programme for the year. The Literature Secretary report 125 subscribers to the Messenger, an increase over last year This is gratifying as it is necessary to keep in touch with the work through the official magazine. The study book "Our Dominion" has exceptionally interesting and proved a valuable aid in preparing splendid programmes.

Delegate Appointed

Mrs. Stinson was appointed a delegate to the Annual Provincial Meeting held in Toronto May 7th to 9th and Mrs. Robt. Hall and Mrs. Allan were chosen to represent this auxiliary at the Presbyterial Canora meeting held in Norwood June 4th and 5th.

A bale valued at $34.24, containing supplies for the school at Moose Mountain and the hospital at Canora was forwarded in September. These gifts give cheer wherever they go. We desire to express our hearty thanks to the committee in charge of these supplies for th every satisfactory and business-like way this work has been done.

A forward step was taken this year by our auxiliary who sent two members from the "Mission Band," Miss Jean Anderson and Miss Lynn to summer school convened at Whitby during the first week in July. These schools have become permanent factors in the work of winning young people to decide definitely for christian service. The Home Helpers Department is for those unable to attend the meeting and the report of the first year's work under the efficient direction of Mrs. Turner is most encouraging.

The Districts

The congregation was divided into districts giving about 12 families to each visitor, with the result that 3 became members of the auxiliary and others promised to do so. Nine new subscribers to the Messenger and 27 home helpers contributed through the Life Boxes $15.00 to the General Fund. The Stranger's Department is growing in interest and value as avenues of service are opened up.

The secretary, Miss Best, reports 22 visits made to shutins and strangers in our midst during the year, and 13 letters sent to the Mission office reporting the departure of families or individuals to take up residence elsewhere. While this means time and effort there is a feeling of satisfaction derived from it and should appeal to many from its very personal touch.

Special Meetings

The three special meetings held during the year are the Annual Meeting, the Day of Prayer and the Thank-offering Meeting. At our last annual meeting, Mrs. Cook who with her husband labored in India for a number of years, gave an address describing their work and the characteristics of the people. At our March meeting we were priviteged to have with us Dr. and Mrs. Waters of India. Mrs. Waters told of the new era that had dawned for the women of India who were clamoring for the education and anxious to emulate western customs. This is significant a sthey have great influence.

Dr. Waters, in a most interesting way told of the leavening of India's millions by Christianity and of the intense loyalty of the people for everything British .He emphasized the need of medical missionaries but the greater need was the "Great Physician of Souls."

These visits are much appreciated as they have great influence.
more than we have been doing and as a token of their appreciation "The ladies, by means of special contribution presented Dr. Waters with a case of instruments to be used in his hospital work on his return to India.

Day of Prayer

The Day of Prayer is observed at the first meeting of the new year. In the dark and anxious days through which we have been passing the eyes of Christian people have been lifted up beyond the hills and people learned to pray who never prayed before. The soul of the nation turned to God in humiliation and prayer, acknowledging the supremacy of God, and exclaiming "Our hope is in Thee." We have still much to pray for. Those in authority over the nations of the world who will soon meet in the Peace Conference to recognize the shattered fabric of nationhood, need the spirit of wisdom and understanding. Let us continue instant in prayer asking God to make us worthy of victory .

The Thank Offering at our October Meeting was $1008. These are times of great gifts to great causes. Our's, the uplift of humanity is a great cause worthy of the splendid liberality of our women shown by their offering as a thanksgiving in this year of victory and a grateful acknowledgement of God's goodness Miss Panto of Oshawa, an old member of St. Paul's and a teacher in the Sunday School addressed the meeting giving a splendid missionary message.

We desire to express our deep sense of loss as a society in the removal by death of three of our faithful members, Mrs. John Cameron, Miss Savigny, and Miss Francis Reid. We offer the loving sympathy to the sorrowing friends and to all who have been bereaved of dear ones overseas or at home. Our prayers are that their hearts may be sustained and comforted by the Christian Hope of a glad reunion. Who will be moved to fill the breach in our auxiliary and take up the work where they have laid it down? The great trust of providing future auxiliary members, workers and missionaries is reposed on the mission bands, which are training schools preparing our young people to "Lift high the torch from fallen hands," and "Carry on." With confidence we look to them for help. It is with sincere appreciation we acknowledge the request of $100 to our auxiliary made by the late Miss Savigny who was always present at the monthly meeting until prevented by failing health. We desire to thank all who by their efforts have made it possible this year to report progress and in serving others may they have been abundantly blessed.

As we look forward to the new year we cannot doubt that great days are before us in all manner of Christian enterprise. Let us strive to get an adequate vision of the taste and as a loving tribute to the memory of our heroic dead who fought for the right may be as followers of Christ, for only as he dominates each heart can we hope to measure up , be prepared to do our part in a new and, aggressive warfare against evil and an earnest and triumphant effort to evangelize the world.

JAKE SOLOMON Prop,

TAKE SALTS TO FLUSH KIDNEYS

Eat Less Meat if You Feel Backachy or Bladder Troubles You—Salts is Fine for Kidneys

Meat forms uric acid which excites and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Regular eaters of meat must flush the kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve the bowels; removing all the acids, waste and poison, else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get irritated, obliging you to get up two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear. The famous salts is made from the juice of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpeneive; harmless and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then, thus avoiding serious kidney and bladder diseases.

Consolidated School at Kapuskasing.

A day school has been opened in the Kapuskasing district, which is being settled by returned soldiers. There are about 100 children of school age in the district, about 60 of the number being in Kapuskasing. Lt.-Col. Innes, director of Soldiers' Settlement Work, has arranged to have three vans brings the children from outlying points to the school.

Getting Rich Quick.

At Kitchener, J. Kellerman, a local fruiterer, has been haled before the police magistrate for swindling a 12-year-old lad out of the purchase price of twenty rabbits. The dealer endeavored to substitute for $6.00 (the agreed price) $1.00 and fifteen baskets of rotten and worthless plums.

WHOOPING COUGH.

Mr. Arthur Hainge, Ashton Farm, Perley, Sask., writes: "Two years ago whooping cough was very bad in this part of the country; our eight months old boy caught it and had a very severe attack A neighbor advised the use of Dr.Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine and we gave it and nothing else with splendid results. When the older brother took the whooping cough we used this medicine promptly and prevented serious trouble, as the cough passed off in two or three days".

SUBMARINE CABLES.

No Immediate Fear That Wireless Will Supplant Them.

While the system of wireless telegraphy continues its growth there is no great evidence that it is likely to supersede the cable. for in the year 1913 new submarine cables were laid by the British government between England and Ireland, although the British postmaster general controls the wireless telegraph stations in Great Britain and Ireland.

Cables were laid by the French government between France and Algiers; by the British, Canadian and Australasian governments jointly between Australasia and New Zealand; by the Greek government between Chios and Mitylene, and the German government has arranged to lay another cable between Germany and England this year. The Dutch government is preparing to lay new cables in the East Indies and the Japanese government between Japan and China. Private English cable companies laid cables from Arabia to Ceylon and from Ceylon to the Malay peninsula. In fact, nearly 6,000 miles of new cable were made and laid in 1913.

The mileage of cables during the last five years has increased from 247,000 to 280,000 The governments have increased their cables by 23 per cent and the private companies by 11 per cent There is no instance of the abandonment of a submarine cable and the substitution of wireless telegraphy.—Argonaut.

Ceilings as Movie Screens.

In the wards of several American hospitals in France, where the wounded men are forced to remain in bed owing to the nature of their wounds, an arrangement has been devised, by means of portable apparatus, whereby cinema films are projected on to the ceiling.

The patients who are lying on heir backs gaze upwards at the scenes thus presented, and the tedium of their positions is thereby relieved.—Tit-Bits.

ACID STOMACH IS DANGEROUS

Often Followed By Serious Gastric Ulcers, Says Authority. Most Frequent Cause of Dyspepsia and Indigestion, Says Keep Stomach Sweet With Magnesia.

"Stomach trouble, dyspepsia; indigestion, sourness, gas, heartburn, food fermentation, etc., are caused nine times in ten by chronic "acid stomach," says a well known authority.

Burning hydrochloric acid develops in the stomach at an alarming rate. The acid irritates and inflames the delicate stomach lining and often leads to gastritis accompanied by dangerous stomach ulcers. Don't dose an acid stomach with pepsin or artificial digestents that only give temporary relief from pain by driving the sour, fermenting food out of the stomach into the intestines. The acid, which caused the trouble, remains in your stomach as dangerous as ever.

Instead, neutralize or sweeten your acid stomach after meals with a little hot water and bisurated Magnesia and not only will the pain vanish but your meals will digest naturally. There is nothing better to sweeten and settle an acid stomach than a good magnesia bath. It soaks up the harmful excess acid much as a sponge or blotting paper might and your stomach acts and feels fine in just a few minutes. Bisurated Magnesia is the special magnesia that should be used for this purpose and it can be obtained from any reliable druggist in either powder or tablet form. It is safe, reliable, easy and pleasant to use, is not a laxative and is not at all expensive.

FIRES AT SEA.

A New Scheme For Smothering Them by the Use of Flue Gas.

One of the most promising of the new methods of fighting fire on shipboard at sea is to fight the fire with fire. It has already been adopted on some vessels and is receiving much attention from marine engineers.

Its purpose is to control just such fires as destroyed the Volturno. By this system the hot gases that come from the boiler flues and ordinarily go up the smokestack are used to smother a fire. A vessel is equipped with great pipes running from the boiler room to all parts of the ship, and at any time the flue gases can be switched from the smokestack to these pipes. The pipes would pour these flue gases into the hold or the sections of the ship where the fire was raging and smother it.

Flue gas contains only 9 per cent of oxygen, and 15 per cent of oxygen is required to support fire. Consequently if great quantities of flue gas are poured into the burning hold the oxygen there will soon be reduced to a point where combustion cannot continue and the fire must die out.—Saturday Evening Post.

HENS ARE NOW LAYING

By Lighting Pens Till 9 p.m. Egg Production Nearly Doubled.

Cause, Symptoms and Cure of Ringworm Explained—As it is Very Contagious the Stockman Must Take Great Precautions to Prevent Its Spread.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

MOSTLY everybody who is keeping poultry wants to get eggs in winter. Generally speaking, the number of eggs gradually goes down from week to week from September to January and then there is a slow but gradual increase until March. April and May, which in Ontario are the best months for egg production.

It is unusual, and in most cases very unwise, to publish figures in regard to experiments until the material has been very thoroughly tested, but in this particular case, considering the high cost of feeds and the general scarcity of new laid eggs, we are giving the figures on a rather short test of but four weeks' duration. The results appear to be generally true in all pens tested and are in accord with results obtained elsewhere.

The increase in egg yield has been obtained by the use of electric lights, or prolonging the day. The facts of the matter appear to be that a hen's crop is too small a reservoir to hold sufficient feed for the long night. A hen, to lay, must have a surplus of feed over and above that required for body maintenance.

In these particular trials, the results of which are given below, the lights were turned on at dusk and were turned off at nine o'clock at night. The birds get their first feed in the morning at seven o'clock and a few dull mornings require lights for about one hour.

The usual feed of grain given at about four to five o'clock in the afternoon is missed or only a handful or two of grain is given to twenty-five birds, simply to keep them moving a little. The full feed is given at about eight o'clock.

The following results have been secured:—

No. of birds.	Eggs laid week beginning October	6th.	13th.	20th.	27th.	Tl.
50	April hatched pullets (electric lights used)	53	150	211	250	664
50	April hatched pullets (no lights used)	14	74	130	174	392
25	yearling hens (electric lights used)	76	96	89	108	369
25	yearling hens (no lights used)	62	70	60	61	253
100	March hatched pullets, all in one pen (lights used)	416	401	404	444	1,665

There are many people keeping poultry who have no electric lights. Fair to good results have been secured elsewhere by using ordinary barn lanterns. The danger of fire when using lanterns is materially increased. We have not tested these as yet but hope to have them under way soon. For electric lighting we use three ordinary bulbs for a pen of one hundred birds, or one light in a twenty-five bird pen.—Prof. R. W. Graham, O. A. College, Guelph.

Ringworm.

Ringworm is a contagious disease to which all classes of animals, and man, are subject.

Calves and young cattle appear to be more susceptible to the trouble than other animals, but no age renders an animal immune. It is purely a skin disease, and is due to the presence of a vegetable parasite which is readily capable of being conveyed from one animal to another by direct contact, the hands of the attendant, pails, stable utensils, clothing, harness, saddles, blankets, the contact of one animal with the stalls etc., of affected animals, etc. In like manner, curry-combs, brushes, rubbing cloths, etc., that are used on affected animals of any class, if used on other animals, become a fertile cause of infection.

Symptoms.—While any part of the animal may be the seat of the disease, the skin around the eyes and of the face, and on the neck and back, appears to be the favorite seat.

The first symptom shown is usually an itchiness, which is followed by a slight form of eruption, which soon assumes the appearance of little yellowish scales of a circular form, the mass scales forming a circular space hence the term "ringworm." A variable number of these circular patches may be noticed on different parts of the body.

Treatment.—It is necessary that great care be taken to avoid the conveyance of the virus from the diseased to healthy animals. Where practicable, it is well to remove all non-infected animals to non-infected premises. The infected premises should be disinfected by thoroughly sweeping and dusting, and then giving a thorough coat of an insecticide, as a hot 10 per cent of one of the coal tar antiseptics or carbolic acid, or a coat of hot lime wash with 5 per cent. carbolic acid.

Local treatment consists in moistening the scales with warm water and soap, or sweet oil, removing them in order to expose the unprotected surfaces of the affected areas. An insecticide, as tincture of iodine should be applied once or twice daily until cured. — J. H. R., Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

Easy to Make This Pine Cough Remedy

Thousands of families swear by its prompt results. Inexpensive, and saves about $2.

You know that pine is used in nearly all prescriptions and remedies for coughs. The reason is that pine contains several peculiar elements that have a remarkable effect in soothing and healing the membranes of the throat and chest.

Pine cough syrups are combinations of pine and syrup. The "syrup" part is usually plain sugar syrup.

To make the best pine cough remedy that money can buy, put 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth) in a 16-oz. bottle, and fill up with home-made sugar syrup. Or you can use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, you make 16 ounces—more than you can buy ready-made for $2.50. It is pure, good and very pleasant—children like it.

You can feel this take hold of a cough or cold in a way that means business. The cough may be dry, hoarse and tight, or may be persistently loose from the formation of phlegm. The cause is the same—inflamed membranes—and this Pinex and Syrup combination will stop it—usually in 24 hours or less. Splendid, too, for bronchial asthma, hoarseness, or any ordinary throat ailment.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and is famous the world over for its prompt effect upon coughs.

Beware of substitutes. Ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

Large Seal Increase.

Preliminary figures for the 1918 census of fur seals on the Pribilof Islands have been received by the Bureau of Fisheries, says the San Francisco Chronicle. These figures show that the approximate total number of the Alaskan herd was 496,000 in 1917. The number of pups born was 143,005, and the number of breeding cows was the same. The average harem based on a count of seven rookeries, was 26.76. This census did not include the 33,881 seals taken during the present year.

The Department had authorized a take of 35,000 skins during the regular killing season, which ended on Aug. 10, but only 33,881 were taken. Of this number 7,000 were taken on St. George Island and 26,881 on St. Paul Island. A few seals will be killed from time to time during the remainder of the year for the purpose of furnishing fresh meat for the natives.

By the terms of the north Pacific sealing convention of July 7, 1911, 15 per cent. of this year's take of the skins belongs to the Canadian Government and a like proportion to the Japanese Government. There will be no actual delivery of these skins, but under a provision of the convention, the market value of the skins will be credited to the respective Governments as an offset to certain advance payments made to them by the United States.

An Official Story-teller.

In several of the public libraries of Canada story-telling to children has for some years been a special feature. Each Saturday morning from fifty to one hundred children assemble at the library in a room set apart for the purpose and called the "Children's Room." The ages of the children vary from six to fourteen years. At St. John, N.B., story-telling has been continued now for three years. This year it has been found advisable to divide the children according to age and to hold two classes of half an hour each. The work has steadily grown in interest, and the demand for books of a less trivial type justify the work of the committee in charge. During the summer, when opportunity offers and a story-teller of note is a guest of the city, notice is given to the library, and it is often possible to have a special session.

New "Official Gazette."

Official announcements for the Yukon Territory are now made in a "Yukon Gazette" section of the Dawson Daily News, these occupying "such portions of page six as may be required" by the Territorial Government for advertising." The Government notices are published with the footnote: "Only the preceding portion of this page constitutes the Yukon Gazette.—(Signed) J. A. M. H. Maltby, King's Printer."

NAMING THE PROVINCES.

Glimpses of History of Our Own Dominion.

Canada (or Kanata, as it may be written) is the plural of the Mohawk word Kanonsa, a house. When Jacques Cartier sailed up the St. Lawrence, a chief came on board his wonderful winged canoe, and of him Cabot enquired, with a wave of the hand towards some huts on the shore, "What land is this?" to which the chief, not clearly understanding replied, "Kanata," meaning the huts and Kanata or Canada the land thenceforth was and still is. The Iroquois, who then possessed the banks of the St. Lawrence, were called Kanonsiauni, the people of the Longhouse, as they dwelt not in wigwams, but in huts, made large enough to accommodate several families, and lengthened from time to time as the families increased.

A post office in the County of Frontenac has the name of Canonto, which is apparently a varied form of Kanonsa or Kanata. But "Adanac" is absolutely inadmissible.

Nova Scotia was named Markland by the first discoverers, but received its present name from Scottish immigrants to offset Nouvelle France and New England. The name was probably chosen by Sir William Alexander (Earl of Stirling), of whom descendants still survive in Canada, some in Toronto.

Interesting facts are connected with the name Acadia. Verrazzano, an Italian navigator, in the service of Francis I. of France, discovered the land in 1524 and named it Arcadia "for the beauty of the trees." It seems odd that an Italian in the service of France should give a newly-discovered land the name of an ancient Greek village, and that for a reason which might have served quite as well for the selection of the name of any one of places innumerable. It is difficult to understand how "Arcadia" was later rendered Acadie or Acadia, but the change was a good one, the latter name being admirable and apparently unique, and it has never been forgotten, and although it is not written on our maps, there may be a possibility of its revival in place of the very objectionable and inappropriate names of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick if those provinces should become united as one province, as has been at some time suggested. It is an odd coincidence that Acadie is so similar to some native place names that it has been supposed to be a partly obsolete word of an Indian language meaning "Land of Plenty."

New Brunswick was named in honor of connections of the royal family in a former generation.

Prince Edward Island bears the name of the Duke of Kent, father of Queen Victoria.

Quebec was given the name of the principal city in 1867.

Ontario at the same date took the name of the "Beautiful lake."

Manitoba, also taken from the name of a lake, when the province was erected; the name means the Voice of God. McLean, in "Canadian Savage Folk," gives a lengthy explanation with a slight difference of signification, which, however, is much the same in the result.

Saskatchewan was given the name of its great river, "the swift-running river."

Alberta was named in honor of the late Prince Consort.

British Columbia calls for no particular remark, further than that the name Columbia has reached a very long distance from its place of origin. Vancouver Island bears the name of a British naval officer, who surveyed the adjacent seas and inlets. The island was known to the Indians as Kateiutegua, "the plain."

Athabasca has been explained as a geographical term, describing a land dotted "here and there" with swamps and muskegs. Perhaps somewhat of a libel by giving such features an undue prominence; there are plenty of swamps and muskegs in other provinces.

Keewatin means "the north." The name would have been better and more dignified as "Keewaydin."

Near the Smoky City.

Yeast—Been away?

Crimsonbeak—Yes; on a fishing trip.

"Where?"

"Out near Pittsburgh."

"Get anything?"

"Oh, yes."

"What kind of fish did you catch?"

"I don't know exactly, but they tasted for all the world like smoked fish."

THOUGHT IT WAS A BOIL

Doctor Said Abscess.

Mr. Gleason R. Young, Kingscroft, N.B., under date of Feb. 9th, 1918, writes us as follows: "About five months ago, a lump came on my jawbone. I thought it was a boil, and after it had been there quite a while it began to get larger. I went to a doctor and he said it was an abscess, and lanced it. He gave me a wash for it, so I went by his directions until it healed up, but it commenced coming again, and in about three weeks it broke itself. I thought it would get better, but it didn't. A neighbour advised me to get a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters, so I sent and got a bottle, and by the time it was all gone, the abscess had disappeared, and now it is all better."

Burdock Blood Bitters will heal and dry up sores, ulcers, and abscesses, no matter how large or of how long standing. If you have never applied it to a cut, wound, sore or ulcer, just try it and see what soothing, healing, cleansing power it possesses. It takes out itching, stinging and burning, and promotes the growth of healthy flesh. So, too, when taken internally, by its power of eliminating all impurities from the blood and making that vital fluid rich, red and pure, it cuts off the origin and source of the foul matter that goes to make boils, pimples, sores, ulcers, abscesses and the like, and at the same time the purified and enriched blood creates healthy tissue where there was formerly, perhaps, a sore full of pus.

Burdock Blood Bitters has been on the market for 40 years. Manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

EASY TO DARKEN YOUR GRAY HAIR

Darkens Beautifully and Restores Its Natural Colour and Lustre at Once.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use preparation improved by the addition of other ingredients, costing about 50 cents a large bottle, at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small stand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Boston Tommy Tuckers.

The door in one of the most popular restaurants in Boston slowly opened at noon while half a hundred diners were eating and a small voice piped:

"Any singin'?"

"No," replied the waitress, and the owner of the voice, a boy of eleven years, walked down the street to another restaurant.

It is becoming a regular practice by boys to sing for the diners for a little loose change. One boy told me that he made $3 in one night recently singing at restaurants.—Boston Post.

How Ward Learned to Read.

Addressing a house of commons committee on the bill relating to employment and school attendance of children, J. Ward, M. P., who recently warned the king in a fiery speech in parliament, said that when a boy working on a farm it was only by making out the letters in the names of the farmers and their farms on the waggons going to Andover that, with the help of a kind lady, he had been able to learn his alphabet by the age of twelve.—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE DOWNWARD TREND.

Come, Nora, Nance and Nellie,
Let us study Botticelli!
When we feel the gnawing craving to be smart,
If we want to be de rigueur
We must educate the figure
To show the downward trend of "plastic art."
The outline should be slack,
Slippy-sloppy, front and back,
Till bodice, skirt and tunic—every stitch—
Seem to call for the support
Of the handy man's resort—
That naval gesture termed the "double hitch."

The shoulders must be drooping,
The knees a trifle stooping,
And the widest waist, remember, takes the prize.
When motoring or shopping
The coatee must be flopping
Through a belt that's sagging downward to the thighs.
But the evening toilet scheme
Shows the opposite extreme,
And when for dance or dinner you're equipped
A clinging "mermaid's tail"
The nether limbs must veil,
While the corsage is the only part that's slipped.

—Punch.

Her Supposition.

Little Grace, a most polite little child, was one day dining with her aunt when she found a hair in her fish.

"Aunt Ella," she said sweetly, "what kind of fish is that?"

"Mackerel, dear."

"Oh," replied Grace, "I thought perhaps it was a mermaid."—Philadelphia Press.

Catering to All.

A Boston merchant tells of an old grocer in Massachusetts who was about as "slick" an article as one would care to meet.

"One day," says the Bostonian, "I stopped before his shop and looked curiously at a long line of barrels of apples, some marked with an 'A,' some marked with a 'Z.'

"'What is the meaning of these markings?' I asked. 'The barrels seem to contain the same kind of apples.'

"'They are the same kind, son,' the old gentleman replied, 'but some customers want a barrel opened at the top and some at the bottom.'"—New York Times.

Canucks Impress the Germans

CROSSING OF THE RHINE WAS AN IMPRESSIVE SPECTACLE.

(Canadian Press via Reuter.)

COLOGNE, December 17. — British and Canadian armies crossed the Rhine on the four bridges here. The Canadian division passed over on a boat bridge. The weather was extremely wet and spoiled an impressive spectacle. The crossing began at nine in the morning and continued until late in the afternoon.

The spectacle was witnessed by large German crowds, who were apparently deeply impressed by the magnificent fitness and marching of the men, and the excellent condition of transport and horses.

ECZEMA ON BABY'S EAR.

Mrs. F. Clarke, Belmont, Man., writes: "My baby had eczema on her ear. The sore was very bad and nothing seemed to do her very much good. Hearing of the remarkable cure Dr. Chase's Ointment was making, we sent for some, and after the third application the sore began to heal. I am glad to say that it is quite well now Ointment. We cannot recommend it is and we give the credit to Dr. Chase's preparation too highly."

Publicity or Bankruptcy?

Bradstreets statement that 84 per cent of all failures are among non-advertisers is significant.

Intelligent advertising has become absolutely essential to every modern industry—

But what shall the advertiser do in the face of war conditions, when he finds it difficult to get goods to fill his orders?

First of all, remember that the fundamental purpose of advertising is to fix indelibly the trade mark or the trade name in the public mind.

A let-up in that campaign must be fatal to any product.

The American Rolling Mill Company declares its purpose to continue its advertising, although for two and a half years it has been unable to supply the demand for its product.

"We are building," they say, "a permanent business edifice, and some day we would have to spend millions of dollars buying back the business and goodwill of our clients if they are forsaken in this emergency."

Unless advertising is kept up without break the advertiser loses the results of all previous effort.

Here is a warning to the advertizer who neglects the dull season in summer—

When advertisements are fewest is the very time when a message to the public may get the most attention, providing, of course, that the character of the advertising deserves it.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Sophomore Joke

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

At the sophomore class balloting, after the students had rather easily disposed of such questions as "Who is the prettiest girl in the class?" "Who is the best football player?" "What is your favorite color?" and "What is the height of your ambition?" the question "Who is the most popular professor in college?" was not so easily dismissed. There were several possible candidates, but no one stood in the light of a decided majority. Then one of the students got up in class meeting and with a gracious flourish cried: "I propose Prof. Reginald Raymond as the most popular member of the faculty." And amid deafening peals of laughter from the members of the class a dozen shouts of "Second the motion" arose, and then "Aye!" "Aye!" till the president's gavel had to bring order.

It was regarded as a capital joke—an uproariously funny joke. Perhaps no one in the world understands the richness of this particular sort of humor so well as a young American undergraduate, and a sophomore at that. But from the sophomore point of view it was something very much to be laughed at—that the professor who, because of certain traits of absent-mindedness, inattention, preoccupation and unsociableness, actually was the most unpopular man in the faculty, should have this fact gently brought home to him by seeing his name blazoned forth in college yearbook and periodical, and announced before all the world at class day, and whispered about by professors and professors' wives, as the "most popular man on the faculty."

Apparently, from the peals of laughter that accompanied the casting of the unanimous ballot in favor of Professor Raymond, every member of the class appreciated the joke.

But when Ruth Rodney, the secretary of the class, and, as the only officer of her sex in the class, generally agreed to be the most popular girl in its number, rose to read the result of the balloting and came to the vote that mentioned Professor Raymond, there was a look of bitter resentment in her expression, and from beneath her lowered eyes she shot a look that was not one of kindness at the student in the front row who had proposed the jest.

"What was the matter, Ruth?" one of the girls asked her after class meeting. "You looked daggers at Steve. Did you want some one else to get the vote? Every one'll know it's a joke. Say, won't Reggie snort when he hears of it?"

"Of course Professor Raymond will be offended," said Ruth shortly. "But I don't see that there is anything so funny about that. After all, he hasn't done anything so very dreadful to our class, except to try and din a little philosophy into our unsophisticated heads. It isn't his fault if college faculties are still obtuse enough to think that philosophy ought to be a compulsory sophomore subject, is it? And it isn't his fault if he's absent-minded, and likes violet neckties, and if his eyes are so sensitive that he has to have the shades drawn in his class-room, is it?"

"You know yourself he's a frightful crab, Ruth," was her companion's conclusion. "Really, for my part I think it is a beautiful joke. I'm just crazy for tomorrow's philosophy lecture to see how mad he is about it."

But the next morning a surprise was in store for the sophomore class. Naturally enough, Professor Raymond had heard of the polling, for even absent-minded professors usually do take a lively interest in matters of that sort. Instead of showing his annoyance, he appeared in his class-room with an unwonted smile upon his face. With that began the second joke, or, as the students soon thought, the best joke of all.

"The poor crab doesn't know he is being kidded!" whispered one sophomore in the front row to another, and after class there were groups of students still explaining to each other how intensely funny the situation was, now that poor Reggie believed he actually was the most popular man in college. That became the standing joke of the campus. Mothers and fathers and younger sisters and brothers, when they came to visit their students, had the shambling, near-sighted professor, who always wore a violet necktie, pointed out as the deluded creature who really thought he was popular with the students, and even staid members of the faculty had a little fun with each other at poor Reginald's expense.

Ruth still saw no joke in the situation. In fact, the very serenity of the professor made her feel the insult that her class had heaped upon him the more. It was in pity then, and in an effort to show her classmates that she did not join them in their practical joking, that she made it a point to linger occasionally after class, on some excuse or other, to talk to him. She wanted the students to see it, and she felt actual pleasure sometimes in having him overtake her on the campus, take long walks with him through the roads that led off into the country.

"Just imagine how mortified he will feel when he finds out that it has been just a joke," Ruth told her classmates on one of the last occasions when she reproved them for their thoughtlessness, and she was only assured by the thoughtless ones that "Reggie was too dense to find out."

It was known that in faculty gatherings reference was sometimes made to "our popular professor," and on such occasions Professor Raymond always beamed his utter satisfaction, much to the amusement of the other members of the faculty.

From those long walks developed friendship, and from friendship dependence, and then love, and before spring had come Ruth and Professor Raymond were engaged, and when college opened the next year they were married and nicely established in one of the new brick terraced little cottages on the campus, with an evening 'at home" to the students every week, and special suppers and teas on frequent occasions to the class to which Ruth had belonged—the class which had paid the renowned honor to Professor Raymond.

First it was noticed that the professor left off purple neckties, and chose in their place those of brown and dark blue and gray. He must have consulted a new oculist, for before long he never bothered with having the shades in his classroom drawn. Then students began to notice that when he passed them on the campus, instead of shuffling by them with the look of Diogenes in search of an honest man, he always met them with a cordial smile, and sometimes found pretext to stop them and pass the time of day with them. At his home were really the most successful "at homes" on the campus.

To be sure, Ruth's delicious sandwiches and chocolate topped with whipped cream may have been the attraction, but it was not only the students, who attended parties in general only for "the eats," who made a point of attending the Raymond "at homes." Professor Raymond always somehow seemed to get a laugh out of the most self-conscious and awkward of his student guests, and he seemed to realize that once you have made a student laugh with you, you have convinced him that you and he are on a friendly footing, and not separated by the chasm that lies between faculty and student body.

Another summer passed, and when the class to which Ruth had belonged returned to their senior year there was another balloting. The results plainly showed that students change in some ways from sophomore to senior year. The honors of pulchritude had passed from the sophomore belle to another girl who had not even been noticed two years before; the favorite color was now crimson instead of violet, and there were more students whose ambition now was to become a millionaire than in the year when the vote of the class went in favor of "Writing a masterpiece of literature." But again the vote for popularity went to Professor Raymond. On this occasion, however, there were no peals of laughter when the unanimous ballot was cast. On the contrary there was a solemn, almost contrite expression on the faces of the students as they voted, and a formal letter telling the professor of his election was sent to him, together with the announcement that he had been elected honorary member of the class.

When the professor opened the letter Ruth was sitting beside him in his study, and there were tears of happiness in her eyes as she read the announcement it contained. "I knew they would re-elect you," she said, with an effort at unconcernedness. Reginald Raymond put out two strong hands and pressed both of Ruth's hands in them.

"Don't you know," he asked, "that I understand that you have won this for me? Could I have been so blind as not to see? I knew they despised me," he said, with a relic of the old bitterness, "and no man ever longed so for student friendship as I did. And you came to show me how to win it."

"But—but you acted—we thought that you believed it—that you didn't see the abominable joke."

"That was my little joke on the class, Ruth, dear. And after those first weeks of mortification about it, I decided that my ambition was first to win your love, and then to win that which has come to me today."

"Marseillaise" Author a Royalist.

The "Marseillaise" is often considered a hymn by radicals and Reds, because it was first widely used by revolutionists, but Rouget de Lisle was, when he wrote it and to the end of his long life, a convinced royalist, true to his oath of loyalty to Louis XVI. Some months after his great hymn was written he was arrested as a counter-revolutionary, and was saved from the guillotine only because Robespierre, the master terrorist, was executed.

Rouget de Lisle was so hostile to the radicals that, rather than take part in the wars of revolutionary France, he retired from the army, becoming prominent again only after the July revolution, when King Louis Philippe made him a chevalier of the Legion of Honor and gave him a pension.

Noah's Ark.

Concerning the possibility of harboring all the animals of Noah's time in the Ark, which is questioned by modern scholars, as quoted in the Outlook recently, a subscriber of that weekly writes: "The article you quote cannot be right, for two reasons: First, the Bible tells us this was what God ordered taken into the Ark. Second, if only two of each sort of clean beasts and birds were taken, and Noah sacrificed one each of these at the foot of the mountain after the flood, there would have been left only one of each species. We don't know how the Ark was arranged; but it must have held all that the Creator wished in it." The above arguments are respectfully referred to the editors of Hastng's Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics, the work quoted from. They have not imitated the wisdom of the editors of another encyclopaedia, who are said to have dodged the controversy about the flood by saying under deluge (see flood), under flood (see inundation), and under inundation referring the patient reader back again to deluge. Hastings' Encyclopaedia takes the bull by the horns in an elaborate discussion under deluge; but as the work is still uncompleted, the subscriber's letter might have consideration under Noah or even rain or water.

JAPAN TO AID RUSSIA.

Land of Bolsheviki Will Be Restored to People.

Marquis Okuma writes in the Tokio Taikon: "With the collapse of Russia and the subsequent extinction of the eastern front, the Central Powers were free to concentrate their military forces on the western front. If Russia could recall her scattered ten million officers and men to her colors and mobilize them on the eastern front, Germany would be obliged to divide her forces in the west and to send part of them back to the Russian frontier. Further, if the Allied army in the west, now possessing the initiative, and millions of the re-established Russian troops in the east were to attack the Central Powers at the same time, it would mean the inevitable surrender of the latter.

"In a vast country such as Russia is Japan can no more expect to send a powerful force beyond the Urals than can the United States; but the important fact is overlooked that ten million Russian soldiers, who formerly fought on the eastern front, still exist, although they are scattered. It is both easy and practicable to call them together and reorganize them, and the Allies could supply officers to organize the Russians, or they could send some thirty thousand soldiers to be brigaded among them. The chief burden to be shouldered by the Allies in the work of redemption would lie in the supply of munitions.

"Sooner or later Russia will be restored of her own accord, but the lapse of time in the revival will be assiduously exploited by Germany. Russia must be revived by all means, for the downfall of the Slav nation will decidedly shatter the 'balance of power' which has been maintained by the co-existence of the Anglo-Saxons, Germans, the Latin race, American, Japanese and Slavs. We should not allow the war, which has already cost enormous sacrifice of life and wealth, to end in a truce, with the probability of another war breaking out at any moment."

The Hokyo Hochi, dealing with this subject, says: "The restoration of Russia is by no means an impossibility. Japan must work for it. Recently, the economic aid of the Russians has become the common interest of all the Allied powers. Let us work for it full of hope and confidence. Indeed, this confidence and hope are the very foundation of the victory of the Allies, which may bring humiliation to Germany and lead to the real peace of the world."

TURBINE AUTOMOBILES.

Twofold Novelty That is Expected to Materialize Next Year.

The Royal Automobile Club of England has just announced that it will hold a competition next year for internal combustion turbine motors.

A double novelty is here—a motorcar run by a turbine and a turbine worked by internal combustion. It was said years ago that an internal combustion turbine would be possible if only platinum were not the most precious of metals, the idea being that nothing but platinum or some similar practically infusible metal could be used for the rotor blades.

The action of the Royal Automobile club in announcing this competition indicates that substantial progress has been made, for otherwise there would be no reason for such an announcement.

"As a matter of fact," writes W. Whittall, motoring editor of the Illustrated London News, "I am able to say that not only has such progress actually been made, but that there is in existence at the present moment an internal combustion turbine motor which I am told on excellent authority does comply with all the requirements necessary for success. In power output for weight of motor it compares quite favorably with engines of the reciprocating type, while in point of fuel efficiency I am told that it leaves little to be desired."

Velocity of the Sun.

Professor Rose has been pursuing his researches to redetermine the translational velocity of the sun through space. The figures which he arrives at are 14.9 miles per second. You can surely have pretty, soft, lustrous hair, and lots of it, if you will spend a few cents for a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine at any drug store or toilet counter and try it as directed.

MASTER OF RETREATS.

Gen. von Hutier Saved Beaten Hun Armies.

Gen. von Hutier is the man who will be remembered in connection with the final phase of the collapse of the German war machine. It was he, and not von Boehn, who directed the German retreat, which was carried out with really masterly precision. The quarrel between easterners and westerners, with Hindenburg on one side and von Falkenhayn on the other, seems to have its parallel in a feud between the Boehns and Hutier. Hutier, apparently, does not believe in the close formations to which some members of the general staff clung. The Boehns favored it owing to Germany's alleged superiority in man-power as well as upon consideration of national temperament. Hutier argued that German man-power was inadequate to the strain of a general war. This was rank heresy. It caused him, long after he had become chief of the third section of the general staff itself to be referred to with some scorn as "that Frenchman." The expression was coined by the Boehns.

Hutier seemed to the military attaches representing foreign countries at the German manoeuvres before the war to be an exemplary family man. His wife is represented as belonging to a rural south German aristocracy, a member of the house of Aichholtz. On the walls of her drawing-room hung framed mottoes worked with her own hands and changed for the sake of emphasis and variety. Hutier brought up three children in dignified simplicity. A son, also called Oscar, was reported among the severely wounded at Verdun. Hutier had a daughter noted for her exquisite beauty, still, perhaps a belle among the officers, and at last accounts unmarried. In Darmstadt, where Hutier lived for a considerable time as commander of the local infantry, his men were distinguished for their unusual smartness. His comfortable, but not large, house on the Martinstrasse was resorted to by musicians. He seemed to have a distinctly French outlook upon life in those days, used the French language fluently, and spoke with admiration of Premier Waldeck-Rousseau.

As a youth at the Kriegs-Akademie, where he spent three years, he attracted attention with a thesis to the effect that a commander's greatness is shown in successful retreat rather than in successful pursuit. The idea was paradoxical to the instructors. The lieutenant was told to submit something else. He sent in a paper on the superiority of Hannibal to Napoleon. This, according to Hutier, consisted in a greater capacity to survive disaster. The unusually long time required by Hutier to attain even the rank of captain is ascribed to his propensity to deal with bizarre conceptions of strategy instead of sticking to conventional ideas. He is, in a word, as the Boehns complain often, subtle rather than practical, French rather than German. For instance, he defends his view that Moreau was a greater genius than Napoleon by a comparison of their fortunes in retreat.

Hutier has the Gallic build and features without the tendency to fleshiness of the Boehns. A war correspondent who studied him through a glass when he was abandoning the Vesle loop, described him as a stiff figure in a long cloak like the Kaiser's, his grizzled hair showing too abundantly at the side of the jaw under the spiked helmet, the eyes hidden by the hand, the attitude that of a dejected man with a headache. Hutier is subject to fits of prolonged melancholy, during which he sits for a long time motionless. This propensity was noticed by the members of his staff when he commanded the garrison at Darmstadt. The illustrated German papers, when they come to Hutier in their laudation of strategical movements on the western front, point out the profundity with which he enters upon the consideration of strategal problems. Napoleon and Scipio were like that, and Hutier has the gift of abstraction. It may not, therefore, be melancholy, but genius which afflicts him.

Hutier is understood to be the real author of the many various proclamations of both Hindenburg and Ludendorff, and to have established and edited personally one of the German newspapers in the French language that flourished during the "rescue" of Belgium, as the Germans call it. A few of his sayings are picked up by the Italian press out of the German:

"The commander who arrives too soon may be as negligent as one who arrives too late.

"The finest thing in battle is to snatch victory from defeat.

"The genius in war, unlike the genius in peace, must learn to endure misunderstanding and neglect."

Belgium.

The scraps of information that one picks up while looking for something else are often of far greater interest than the thing originally sought for. For instance, I was trying the other day to verify a date in the Historians' History, and came on this passage, quoted from Theodore Just: "Belgium was thus the principal cause, the determining cause, of the wars of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. During a hundred and fifty years the armies of most of the nations of Europe came to fight in the plains of Belgium, to besiege her towns, to devastate her country districts; thousands of men perished on this everlastingly disputed soil." This was written in Paris in 1894; and the historian might to-day repeat most of these words with emphasis increased a hundredfold.

THIN PEOPLE SHOULD TAKE PHOSPHATE

Nothing Like Plain Bitro-Phosphate to Put on Firm, Healthy Flesh and to Increase Strength, Vigour and Nerve Force.

Judging from the countless preparations and treatments which are continually being advertised for the purpose of making thin people fleshy, developing arms, neck and bust, and replacing ugly hollows and angles by the soft curved lines of health and beauty, there are evidently thousands of men and women who keenly feel their excessive thinness.

Thinness and weakness are usually due to starved nerves. Our bodies need more phosphate than is contained in modern foods. Physicians claim there is nothing that will supply this deficiency so well as the organic phosphate known among druggists as bitro phosphate, which is inexpensive and sold by McDermid and Jury and by most druggists under a guarantee of satisfaction or money back. By feeding the nerves directly and by supplying the body cells with the necessary phosphoric food elements, bitro-phosphate quickly produces a welcome transformation in the appearance; the increase in weight frequently being astonishing.

This increase in weight also carries with it a general improvement in the health. Nervousness, sleeplessness and lack of energy, which nearly always accompany excessive thinness, soon disappear, dull eyes become bright and pale cheeks glow with the bloom of perfect health.

CAUTION:— Although bitro-phosphate is unsurpassed for relieving nervousness, sleeplessness and general weakness, it should not, owing to its remarkable flesh-growing properties, be used by anyone who does not desire to put on flesh.

Many a man who acts square during the day is a rounder at night.

Three Years of Service with our Army

Her Popular Daughter

By GEORGIANNA HORN

"My daughter," stated the large woman who caught her breath first in the pause in conversation and so got ahead of the other ladies, "my daughter is so terribly popular that sometimes, I declare, I wish I had a child who was so homely that people always spoke of her as having a lovely nature and sweet disposition. Not that Eloise lacks either of those attributes, but folks generally speak of her eyelashes or her color or something obvious like that!

"Just why I haven't been down sick with nervous prostration I don't know—sitting in my room night after night all tense and ready to jump at the slightest noise because three of Eloise's most devoted admirers insisted on all coming at the same time, and you never knew whether they were going to fly at one another's throats or not!

"Harry would come in carrying a box of violets and would look with scorn at Grenfield's box of candy—and Percy would arrive just then with a new book of poems and turn pale at the vision of the mundane offerings of the other two. You'd a-thought they'd have liked a chance to go home and catch a mite of sleep, but each one would stick and hang, as if afraid to leave the others in possession of the field.

"Their conversation consisted of growls down deep in their throats and how Eloise ever stood it I can't see. She insisted it was an inspiring situation and seemed to thrive on it, wearing a different gown every night and having her hair marcelled till it's a wonder the roots endured it.

"'Eloise,' I would say to her, 'think of the hordes of unattractive girls sitting at home darning stockings simply because they have not a single beau to dress up for—and release your clutches on three or four of yours! It's pure selfishness to corner the market, and I'm sure if Mr. Hoover finds out you are hoarding admirers as you are something dreadful will happen.'

"I give you my word there were tears in that child's eyes. 'Mother,' she said, 'they wouldn't leave if I set off dynamite underneath their chairs!' And I guess it's true. When a girl is really fascinating all her family can do is to stand it. Of course, if Eloise ate all the candy Grenfield brought, her face would be a sight, but her father and I enjoy it very much, and when Harry's flowers overrun all the vases in the house I take a bunch to my sister, whose daughter would be amazed and surprised into a nervous chill if anyone so much as picked her a bouquet of dandelions! I always believe in cheering up those who suffer. I can't do much with Percy's books of poems, but they do to weight down things as well as make the library table look literary!

"I'm only thankful that Eloise got rid of a beau she had when she was eighteen. He was forty and a widower, with black whiskers. I always thought the whiskers were responsible for the child's temporary fascination, because she was young enough to be expecting birds and things to pop out of 'em any minute. This Mr. Sandmorrow was a collector of ores and rocks and every time he came he would bring Eloise a choice specimen weighing a pound, more or less, and you know how careless girls are!

"Her father was always stumbling onto one in his stocking feet and breaking a toe, and if I tried to take down anything from a closet shelf I was more than likely to get an awful crack over the head from a rock that Eloise had tucked up there in despair of finding any other empty place. All the mahogany was scratched up from Mr. Sandmorrow's ore specimens and there was a long row of them on the mantel, making the house look like a stone mason's sample office.

"But right after him Eloise had the young man who threatened to commit suicide and the lawyer who wanted to read her all his briefs—and her father and I in the library were compelled to listen also—so, altogether, we kind of forgot our troubles with Mr. Sandmorrow.

"I've begged Eloise to freeze some of her admirers out, so that life may be more livable for father and myself, but she's so tenderhearted she couldn't hurt a fly.

"'When I'm making so many of the poor things unhappy, mother,' she says; 'I just have to be nice to them!'

"As I say, I wish she had a pug nose or wore flat heels or something!"

"You poor thing!" sympathized the thin woman who had been turning the heel of a sock and hadn't wanted to talk, anyhow. "I'm glad mine are both boys!"

SCIENCE OF EUGENICS.

Just What it Teaches and the Genius Who Originated it.

The term "eugenic" is a new word. It is only recently that it has filled the columns of magazines and newspapers with its ideas. What does it mean? To most people it means something vague and indefinite about marriage, childbirth and posterity.

In 1911 the papers told of the death of a noted scientist and African explorer, Francis Galton. His fame then was chiefly for his African explorations. His really important work was overlooked.

A nephew of Darwin, his thoughts naturally drifted toward heredity and his theory as to it gave him for a time a good deal of prominence. His theory was that half the tangible traits and peculiarities of any individual are inherited directly from his parents, a quarter from his grandparents and the remaining quarter from all precedent generations. This theory is sometimes spoken of as Galton's law.

In his later years Galton took up the study of heredity with reference to its practical application. He believed that through a system of statistics a set of highly useful rules could be formulated for the betterment of our race through a more rational and scientific selection of marriage partners.

The science thus formulated he christened "eugenics" and this word has since become familiar to thousands of people who never heard the name of its originator.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Shock Left Her Weak and Nervous

COULD NOT SLEEP

When the system receives a shock of any kind, the heart becomes weakened, the nerves unstrung, the appetite poor, faint and weak feelings come over you, you can't sleep at night, and you wonder if life is worth living.

To all those who suffer from nervous shock we would recommend Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills as the best remedy to tone up the entire system and strengthen the weakened organs.

Mrs. J. J. Bunyan, Pilot Butte, Sask., writes:—"I have used Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills after having suffered from a terrible shock to my whole system. I was so utterly weak, and nervous I could not sleep at night, and my appetite was very poor. I could not walk across the floor without trembling all over.

I had hot flushes and fainting spells. When I was on the second box of your Heart and Nerve Pills, I began to feel that they were doing me good, so I kept on until I had used six boxes, when I felt like a different person.

I am never without them in the house, and highly recommend them to all who suffer with their heart."

Following the Band.

A new attachment for moving picture machines makes it possible for a band behind the scenes to play a tune in exact time with the apparent playing of a band shown on the moving picture screen. It can be varied for many other musical effects, such as the singing of a solo, for instance. The moving picture machine which throws the scene on the screen also sends outside of the view of the audience to a screen which can be seen by the band in back a picture of the bandmaster or orchestra conductor conducting the music. The band which is depicted on the screen played originally to the leading of this bandmaster, and then when the scene is given in the theater the substitute band behind the screen has only to obey the motions of this bandmaster in order to be in perfect time with the picture.—Exchange.

EAT What You Like

Use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets to Help Your Stomach and Do Not Worry.

"Believe Me, I Enjoy My Meals to the Limit. No Fear of Consequences, Either, While I Have Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets to Fall Back Upon."

Dyspepsia, indigestion, weak stomach and similar names simply mean that the supply of digestive juices is inadequate. That is where Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets come in—by supplying this deficiency.

If you will eat a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet after each meal and one just before you go to bed, you will learn that there is no harm in your meals.

The reason is clearly plain. Your system lacks the proper digestive juices to make your meals easily digested. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets give the stomach and other organs of the digestive apparatus the wherewithal to digest food.

This is Better Than Laxatives

One NR Tablet Each Night For A Week Will Correct Your Constipation and Make Constant Dosing Unnecessary. Try It.

Poor digestion and assimilation mean a poorly nourished body and low vitality. Poor elimination means clogged bowels, fermentation, putrifaction and the formation of poisonous gases which are absorbed by the blood and carried through the body.

The result is weakness, headaches, dizziness, coated tongue, inactive liver, bilious attacks, loss of energy, nervousness, poor appetite, impoverished blood, sallow complexion, pimples, skin disease, and often times serious illness.

Ordinary laxatives, purges and cathartics—salts, oils, calomel and the like—may relieve for a few hours, but real, lasting benefit can only come through use of medicine that tones up and strengthens the digestive as well as the eliminative organs.

Get a 25c box of Nature's Remedy (NR Tablets) and take one tablet each night for a week. Relief will follow the very first dose, but a few days will elapse before you feel and realize the fullest benefit. When you get straightened out and feel just right again you need not take medicine every day—an occasional NR Tablet will then keep your system in good condition and you will always feel your best. Remember, keeping well is easier and cheaper than getting well.

Nature's Remedy (NR Tablets) are sold, guaranteed and recommended by your druggist.

Toronto Police Force Went on Strike To-day

City is Quiet in Spite of the Absence of Constables—Ninety Officers on Duty.

IN CONFERENCE

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Dec. 18.—Three hundred and eighty-five of the five hundred members of the Toronto police force are on strike this morning as a result of the dismissal by the Police Commissioners yesterday of thirteen officials of the "Police Union," which the Commissioners have declined to recognize because of its affiliation with the Trades and Labour Council. Union officials were summarily dismissed when they refused to resign positions in the Union. About ninety inspectors, sergeants and "inside men" are on duty to-day but there are no uniformed constables or detectives on the streets. So far the city is quiet and conditions normal. Mayor Church and members of the City Council are making every effort to effect a temporary settlement so that the men will go back to duty, pending further negotiations.

Canadian Press:

TORONTO, Dec. 18.—The Toronto Police Commissioners met at noon, but nothing definite was accomplished toward ending the strike of the police force here. Striking constables will be on the streets to-night in plain clothes, and will deal summarily, if not officially, with any attempts at hoodlumism.

WILSON REFUSES TO TO COMMIT HIMSELF

President Believes in the Formation of a League of Nations.

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, Dec. 18.—"I not only favour the League of Nations, but I believe the formation of such a League is absolutely indispensable to the maintenance of peace," President Wilson declared to-day.

The President made this statement in denying the authenticity of a despatch published in an American newspaper declaring he approved the plan of the League to enforce peace.

"It is entirely false," the President said. "I am, as everyone knows, not only in favour of a League of Nations, but I believe the formation of such a League is absolutely indispensable to maintenance of peace, but the particulars of a plan of the League to enforce peace was never directly or indirectly endorsed by me."

A Once Over.

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, Dec. 18.—The pour parlers are going on with a healthy rock bottom basis according to the conviction of the French. Every political chief has already been called to the Murat Palace, where, eye to eye, the American and French leaders have sized up each other.

The Frenchmen admit they greatly admire President Wilson and are puzzled by the domestic situation in the United States. They are like the sphinxes themselves, regarding this latter lest they embarass the government. They admit they are unable to grasp what has transpired and is transpiring in America, which they confess, owing to the circumstances, is most harmful.

FAREWELL TO AMERICANS

The Day the German Fleet Surrendered Was a "Pitiful Day to See," Said Sir David Beatty.

THANKED AMERICANS

(Special to Examiner.)

LONDON, December 18. — "The American battleship squadron attached to the British Grand Fleet displayed a spirit of true comradeship throughout its period of service," declared Admiral Sir David Beatty, commander-in-chief of the Grand Fleet, in a farewell address on board the U.S.S. "New York," on December 1st, the day the squadron was detached from the Grand Fleet.

All hands had been called to muster on the forecastle to hear Admiral Beatty. After thanking the American officers and men for their co-operation Sir David remarked that both the British and Americans were disappointed in not having been able to meet the German fleet. He declared that the day the German fleet surrendered was a "pitiful day to see." Sir David said he had always had misgivings that the Germans would never come out for a finish fight, and these misgivings had been strengthened by the coming of the American squadron.

PETERBORO BOYS BACK FROM OVERSEAS

Big Party Welcomed at G.T.R. Station Last Evening.

A big party of Peterboro soldiers, home from overseas, arrived on the 8.26 G. T. R. train last evening, and were welcomed by the Salvation Army band, a number of the city's representatives, including His Worship the Mayor, and a big gathering of citizens, who cheered lustily as the train pulled into the station. The party came over on the "old reliable," the Olympic, which arrived at Halifax on Saturday.

Among those who reached the city last night were Serget. Harry Portsmouth, formerly of the 8th Canadian Mounted Rifles, Wheeler Renouf and Driver William Payne, original members of the 4th Battery, who were home last spring on furlough; Pte. Dick Knox, who went overseas with the Queen's Highlanders, from Kingston; Sergt. Blaine, who enlisted in the west, and whose parents now reside here, and Pte. N. Graham, son of ex-Ald. J. G. Graham, Dublin street. The returning Peterboro men were taken to their homes in motor cars.

On the train were about twenty Lindsay returned men who disentrained here to wait until the Grand Trunk officials could arrange to have a passenger car attacked to a freight in order to enable the boys to get home last night. Mayor Duncan took charge of the Lindsay party and entertained them at supper at the Boston Cafe. The Salvation Army Band headed the procession from the station and played patriotic airs while the men were at supper. Afterwards they escorted the Veterans to the station and gave them an enthusiastic send-off. In the meantime Mayor Duncan phoned Mayor Kylie of Lindsay to tell him of the coming of the party so that arrangements could be made to give them a proper welcome home.

This attraction has been booked at the Empire theatre, and will run for twenty weeks, one episode each week, beginning to-day.

Professor Gillespie Addressed the Engineers Last Evening

CHRISTMAS TREE FOR THE SHELTER.

The Children's Aid Society are having a Christmas tree at the Shelter, and anyone wishing to make the holiday brighter for the wards of the Society may leave their contributions at the Examiner, or with Mr. G. W. Powell, the Agent.

Sewage Disposal Was the Subject of His Address—Conditions in Peterboro.

Professor Gillespie, of Toronto University, in an illustrated lecture before the Engineers' Club last evening in the Public Library, explained in technical terms the different kinds of sewage disposal plants throughout the world, dealing with the method of construction and operation.

Mr. Charles Sisson, of the Canadian General Electric Company, was chairman for the evening. The entire City Council attended in a body, also members of the County officials, including Warden W. A. Anderson, Reeve John McIntosh of North Monaghan, and County Clerk Ed. Elliott.

Professor Gillespie, who is well-known in the city having formerly taught school here, explained that sewage disposal is mostly by the "water-carried" system. The rivers and streams are the draining systems of a community. Experiments show that if sewage is put into a stream, in a very short time it will purify itself. This is called natural purification. It is the oxygen in the water which renders the sewage harmless. If a stream is polluted to a great extent there will not be enough oxygen to purify it. Great pains must be taken to see that not too much sewage is drained into a certain-sized stream. In Canada there are 279 communities in which sewage is disposed of by draining into a stream, but only 75 of these treat the sewage before it is drained into the stream."

In Other Countries.

Professor Gillespie showed slides of the sewage disposal plants of other communities. Hamburg, Germany, uses the screening method. London, England, and Glasgow, Scotland, after a rough treatment of the sewage, take it in ships far out into the ocean and dump it. Many cities in the State of Massachusetts drain the sewage into areas of sand which is soon enriched. In some places as high as sixty acres of sand are used. Then other places treat it chemically by draining it through septic or Imhoff tanks. Slides showing the Imhoff tanks of Essen, Germany, where the big Krupp Armament factories are situated, were shown.

In Germany.

In the mining districts of Germany, where the surface is much undermined, the sewage is carried above ground in open troughs. If the sewage was carried in the ordinary method, below ground, the ground would perhaps settle and fill the drains as it did only a short time ago on Romaine street, causing much expense to the city.

Is Reclaimed.

In Bradford, England, the great woollen manufacturing centre, there is considerable grease in the streams. This grease, together with the sludge is reclaimed and pressed so that it resembles coal. It is used as fuel and is said to have half the heating qualities of soft coal and burns readily.

No sewage should be put into water until it is treated in some way, and water should not be taken out of a stream without being treated. This dictum is issued by the International Joint Waterways Commission.

City Engineer Parsons.

City Engineer R. H. Parsons explained to Professor Gillespie that one of Peterborough's chief difficulties was the inability to get suitable beds on which to put the plant. Enormous expense would be involved. Also it would be necessary to pump the sewage which would entail enormous expense.

County Clerk Ed. Elliott moved a vote of thanks, seconded by City Engineer Parsons, for Professor Gillespie's instructive address on sewage disposal.

The Meeting Called Off

Berlin Government Shows Signs of Gaining Strength.

By Frank K. Taylor.
(United Press.)

BERLIN, Dec. 18. — The proposed "insurgent meeting of the Reichstag," in defiance of the Ebert-Haase government, was called off to-day by its President, Konstantin Fehrenbach.

Fehrenbach explained that the meeting was rendered unnecessary by the extension of the armistice. His action, however, is regarded in some circles, as a complete backdown.

New Cologne, the hotbed of Spartacusians, was raided last night by troops of the People's Council. Followers of Karl Leibknecht, who had held the public buildings for a fortnight, were forcibly ejected.

The trend of yesterday's meetings and demonstrations seemed to be toward strengthening the Ebert-Haase coalition.

Searching for Missing Man

Chief Thompson is in receipt of a letter from the secretary of the Board of Trade, asking him to be on the look-out for a man named Watkin Hargreaves, who hasn't been heard from for 4 or 5 years. At that time he gave his address as Shauneyan, Saskatchewan, but mail sent to him received no answer.

His father recently died in Leeds, England, and his brother was killed in action the day following. His sister is now very ill and his mother wishes to communicate with him.

Hargreaves was born in Leeds 34 years ago. He was very dark, both in complexion and the colour of his hair. He is 5 feet, 8 inches tall and weighs from 190 to 200 pounds. He is very near sighted and wears thick glasses. He was at one time employed as an inspector by the Smith Boarding Car Construction Company. He might possibly be employed as a cook or some other similar occupation.

Andrew Post Was Convicted of Assault

Interesting Case Dealt With at Apsley Yesterday.

Andrew Post charged with assaulting Robert Simpson and occasioning considerable bodily harm was convicted by County Magistrate Langley of common assault and fined $10 and costs at Apsley yesterday afternoon. Mr. F. D. Kerr appeared for the prosecution, Mr. J. O'Brien for the defence.

The complaint against Doxsee and Colby, trustees of School Section Number 6 Chandos and Andrew Post for opening the school after it had been closed by the Medical Health officer occupied most of the afternoon and evening and judgment was reserved until Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The Evidence

The evidence showed the closing of the school on several occasions and re-opening without permission and contested the authority of the M. H. O. alleging that he had not been properly appointed. The existence of a large amount of illness described by the M. H. O. is influenza or la grippe was testified to by several witnesses. The matter being of public interest to the residents of ther township, the Court House was filled with spectators.

Mr. F. D. Kerr acted for the prosecution and Mr. J. O'Brien for the defence.

THE WEATHER

Every day of the fine weather that we have been favored with lately shortens the winter, lessens the demands on the coal bin, and therefore lightens the worries of Fuel Commissioner Wearing. Large quantities of fuel should, and doubtless are, being conserved. Lowest temperature last night 20 degrees; highest yesterday 39. About the same to-day. At present fine clear weather prevails all over the continent, excepting on the Atlantic seaboard, and the barometer has been particularly high since Monday.—W.P.

Represents the Seamen

Peter Wright is a Member of the Most Powerful Labour Union in the World—Speaks at Collegiate.

DESERVES GREAT WELCOME

Thursday night's meeting in the Collegiate Institute Assembly Hall, at which Councillor Peter Wright of the British Seamen's Union will give an address, should in one sense take the form of a reception by Labour men to this representative of the most powerful labour organization in the world. Mr. Harry Harper, of the International Machinists, and Mr. John Noble of the Electrical Workers, who are in the city to-day, speak in the highest terms of Mr. Wright, stating that his address in Toronto a few days ago was really a memorable event. Mayor Duncan will preside at the meeting which, it was stated, would begin sharp at eight o'clock. His Honour Judge Huycke, representing the Navy League, will assist the Mayor. It is hoped that a large audience will greet Mr. Wright.

It will be remembered that as a spokesman for the Seamen's Union, he told the British pacifists who desired to attend the Stockholm conference that if they wanted to go they would have to swim the North Sea. The Seamen absolutely refused to man any boat to carry these delegates. And they remained in England. Citizens will not only be well repaid by hearing Mr Wright, but their greeting will be a tribute to himself and the great Union of patriotic sailors he represents. It is underatood that there is no admission fee.

Farmers Will Take a Hand In the Elections

United Farmers Are in Session in Toronto To-day.

Canadian Press:

TORONTO, Dec. 18.—Continued independent political action by the farmers of Canada, was forecasted by President R. H. Halbert in his address to-day to the United Farmers of Ontario at their annual convention, at which one thousand from all parts of the province were present. Secretary Morrison complained bitterly of the attitude of the Press and also of the cold reception of the government towards the anti-conscription farmers' delegation last year. One delegate said it was outrageous that draftees should be sent to Siberia without their consent. The general opinion was that nothing but parliamentary procedure would give the farmers their rights, and arrangements will be made to contest with the farmers' representative every possible constituency in bye-elections or general elections. Lawyer Gordon Waldron declared there was collusion between the military and the courts in carrying out of the Military Service Act.

WHEAT MAY BE SOLD FOR MILLING AND FEED AS IN PRE-WAR TIMES

OTTAWA, Dec. 18.—By the omission in a telegraphic summary of the last clause in an order-in-council on December 11, repealing section 2 of a order passed on March 7 prohibiting the feeding of wheat to poultry, a misunderstanding is prevalent. The facts are that wheat may now be purchased or sold for milling and for the feeding of poultry as in pre-war times. The later order-in-council was a definite repeal of the war-time restrictions.

SESSION WAS ADJOURNED

Soldiers' Demonstration Prompted Ebert to Bring the Meeting to a Close.

WAR MINISTER RESIGNS

By Frank J. Taylor.
(United Press.)

BERLIN, Dec. 18.—The conflict between Radicals and the Ebert-Haase government, which broke out afresh yesterday, is still undecided.

The demonstration by soldiers outside the Reichstag building, led by Karl Leibknecht, was more serious than appeared at first. While there were not actual physical encounters, the attitude of the soldiers succeeded in forcing Chancellor Ebert to avert an issue by adjourning the Soldiers' Council until to-morrow. If the Radical movement continues to grow, the present governments may be overthrown.

The Radicals gained courage for their demonstration yesterday from the attacks made by George Ledebour and Richard Barth against the People's Council, which resulted in Barth bolting the meeting.

Major General Scheuch has resigned as War Minister, owing to disagreements concerning military policies. He is also blamed for the disorders throughout Germany.

SIXTEEN DEAD IN TOURISTS' SLEEPER

SCENE WHEN FIRE BROKE OUT WAS INDESCRIBABLE.

(Canadian Press.)

WINNIPEG, December 18. — An official list of sixteen dead and a dozen injured has now been compiled at an inquest concerning the fire in a tourist sleeper on No. 4 C. P. R. train at Bonheur station yesterday. Advices from Kenora state that coffins are being rushed to the scene of the disaster. Eye witnesses say that the passengers in the car became panic-stricken. The scene was indescribable. It is thought that the majority of those killed were either suffocated in their berths or knocked over and trampled on. The work of identification of the victims proceeds slowly.

LITTLE SUPPORT FOR SOVIET REPUBLIC THROUGHOUT GERMANY

(Canadian Press.)

BERLIN, December 18. — The Berlin newspapers almost without exception declare that the first day's session of the Soldiers' and Workmen's Congress made a national assembly a certainty. It is generally considered likely that the date will be advanced from that already discussed. Independent Socialist Freiheit, who is opposed to holding the assembly until late in the spring, in order to have an opportunity to "enlighten" voters, now declares that the overwhelming majority of the Soldiers' and Workmen's Councils, favour an assembly. It says that the idea of making Germany a Soviet Republic has found little support.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 18TH, 1918.

A NEW ORDER OF THINGS.

In the good old days of municipal campaigning the candidates for civic positions had a fairly easy time. Their platforms could be as general as they like to make them, and if they confined their promises to their intention to trim down the tax-rate and exercise "proper ecenomy in the city's affairs," that was about all that was expected of them. This quite different in this year of grace. The aspirants for places on Peterborough's aldermanic board are being pinned down to definite things. For instance the Playgrounds Association has asked them to state definitely where they stand on the question of providing public swimming-baths and no candidate is to be allowed to side-step this issue. After they get through answering this question they will have to face a broad-side from the Great War Veterans who intend to ask them to declare themselves on the matter of providing permanent quarters for the Veterans and of erecting a suitable memorial for Peterborough's dead soldiers. The Provincial Branch of the Great War Veterans has also sent out instructions that all candidates for municipal positions shall be asked to publicly state their views on the housing problem, so that already the candidates have three or four questions to consider and there may be more before New Year's Day. The old campaigners must be sighing for the return of the former order of things when a few general remarks about the tax-rate and a course of hand-shaking and baby-kissing were all that were needed to ensure a fair chance of election.

TIME FOR A CHANGE.

It is surely the desire of the Canadian people that the Canadian soldiers who are returning from overseas should be given the very best treatment possible on their vayage across the Atlantic. Nothing less would be worthy of the men who have helped to win the day for the Allies. The stories of Peterborough men who have recently returned, coupled with the dissatisfaction expressed by other returned soldiers forces one to believe, however, that whatever may be the wish of the Canadian people towards our returning heroes the authorities who have in charge the transporting of troops cannot be congratulated upon the arrangements they have made. Complaints of the manner in which the rank and file have been treated are general throughout Canada and Harris Turner, formerly of the Princess Pats, and now editor of the weekly publication which bears his name, refers to this scandal in the current issue:

"Ever since the troops began to be returned from the front," he writes, "complaints have been made as to their treatment on the voyage back. When the very first casualties were being sent home, very grave accusations were made in this regard. It was at that time stated that wounded men were being returned with criminals whom the army found incorrigible and that on the boat no distinction was made betyeen the two classes of men. Ever since that time there has hardly been a convoy returning to this country who have not complained bitterly of their treatment on board. Those complaints have not been pressed home with the vigour which appears to be necessary to get those in authority to awaken to the facts of the situation. The reason for this is easily explainable. The men were home and their chief concern wos to get to see their friends as quickly as possible. The trip was over and the joy of arriving in Canada washed away from their minds any intention they might have of pursuing their grievance vigorously. However, there was always somebody who, exasperated by the treatment and mindful of those who were to follow, sent his his complains to the proper channels and saw that they got publicity in the press.

The nature of the complaint was much the same in all cases. It was this. All returning men whether they are casualties from the front or men sent back from England, return in the same boat. No distinction whatever is made in favour of a wounded man as such. When they got on the boat their berths are allocated according to rank. The result is that the privates are crowded into that part of the vessel called the steerage. The officers, warrant officers, and, in some instances, the sergeants, are given the first and second class quarters. A large number—I think I would be correct in saying the vast majority—of returning officers and, in fewer instances, warrant officers are returned from England and are, as a rule, just as fit as ever they were. To make matters worse many of the officers—a surprisingly large number, as a matter of fact—have been returned as surplus, having refused to revert in order to get to France. For those who do not know what this means, the following explanation may be fitting. A rule is in existence whereby no officer higher than the rank of Lieutenant will be permitted to go to France and maintain his rank. When a Captain, or any man of higher rank, wishes to go across and do a little fighting, he must revert back to the rank of Lieutenant—unless, of course, he has been to France before and held a higher rank there—and as the Military Authorities cannot force him to do this, he must do it of his own free will. If he refuses he is returned to Canada as a surplus officer. Now, to return to the boat, the exasperation of the wounded men can be better appreciated. Big, healthy, husky officers and, in some cases, N.C.O.'s, as strong and fit as ever they were, many of them returning under the shelter of an extra star or crown, having let other men do their fighting for them, are given the big staterooms, lounges, smoking-rooms, and ample deck space of the first class sections, while the wounded fighting soldiers, maimed as they are seen in Canada, with legs and arms gone and sometimes still suffering grievously from their wounds, are huddled into the small and stuffy steerage and the limited deck space that goes with it. At certain periods during inspections they are forced to go on deck, and as there is usually only seating room for about thirty or forty, the remainder of three or four hundred have to balance themselves on their crutches and stand up. This is not an exaggerated view. Ask any returned man and you will find that this has been, approximately, his experience.

It is a crying shame that such a condition of affairs should exist and it is a still greater shame that once pointed out, they should be allowed to exist one moment longer. Every organization of returned men and every body of civilians in the Dominion should vigorously pursue this matter and see that it is settled right away. It is not as if it were a difficult matter to rectify, and it is not as if there were two sides to the question; it is just the plain duty of the Government of Canada, which they, no doubt, may do if the agitation behind it is loud enough and sufficiently prolonged.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Some of the farmers seem to think that owing to the manner in which the Union government handled the question of farmers and their relation to the Military Service Act, the official organ of the Grain Growers should change its name to "The Grain Growers' Guyed." — Turner's Weekly.

While the Canadian Press correspondent cabling from France states that the 1st and 2nd Divisions are to be demobilized, General Mewburn, Minister of Militia, has announced that 100,000 Canadians will remain in Germany until next March at least. The first report would be more pleasing to the majority of the people of Canada.

The Health Association deserves the heartiest support of the citizens of Peterborough. For that reason the social evening at the Empress Hotel on Friday, Dec. 27th, should not be overlooked.

Our duty to the boys who are coming back is not completed by meeting them at the station. There must be suitable employment found for them.

MUCH GOOD WORK DONE BY THE G.W.V.A.

Report of Secretary Whatley Shows that $1,857 Has Been Expended in Various Forms of Relief and That Adjustment of Pensions, Separation Allowances and Post-Discharge Pay Has Amounted to $6,876.00.

At the meeting of the Great War Veterans on Monday night, Secretary Whatley presnted the following report of the year's operations:

I have much pleasure in submitting to you my second annual report. The year just ending has been full of problems for our Association, but, thanks to the wise counsel of your officers and the splendid co-operation of the Ladies' Auxiliary, we have been able to overcome them all. Here let me say something about the ladies.

It is to them that we owe, in a measure, the splendid furnishings that we have, and I want to say this, Comrades, that in this respect we have the equal of anything of its kind in the Province, as far as our Association is concerned. Then again, they have taken to themselves the duty of visiting our sick Comrades and their families, and administering relief, in cases of necessity. Altogether their work has been very gratifying, and our thanks are due to them for the splendid manner in which they have taken up this work on our behalf.

Our own work is marked by the steady increase in membership. During the past year we have initiated 137 members, which makes a total of 368 members upon your books. This means about 92 p.c. of the men who have returned to this district up to the end of October, 1918. These figures augur well for the future of the Association, and at the present rate of progress, the end of 1919 should see a membership of over 2,000 in your branch.

In respect of this, too, I would point out to you, Comrades, that your present quarters are totally inadequate, and every effort must be made to secure larger and permanent quarters; and, to this end, we must devote all our energies during the coming year to secure such new accommodation consistent with our increased membership and the great work that lies before us.

Not a Lounging Place.

Here let me say something of this work, so little is known of it outside the precincts of these walls. The impression among many of the public to-day is that our rooms are a lounging place for loafers, instead of a place where legitimate and honest work is being done to succor the needy and distressed among our Comrades and their families, through their sacrifice and patriotism to their beloved country. It may be said that the government should do this work. Yes, that is true, but the Federal government, like the Municipal government, has fallen short of its duty and its promises; many are the hardships that confront our Comrades and their denendents. It is to that end that the G.W.V.A. of Canada was formed, to secure justice for these dependents, and it is my purpose here to show the nature of some of the injustices meted out to the returned man and to the families of those who have paid the supreme sacrifice and who will return to us no more.

Here let me say that this branch has been successful in getting adjusted pensions, separation allowance and post-discharge pay to the extent of $6,876.00 during the past year. This alone justifies the existence of the Great War Veterans' Association.

I purpose quoting a few instances of men who have returned after having served their country, in France and Flanders, been gassed, shell-shocked and wounded, been discharged and the Board of Pensions Commissioners claimed that they had no pensionable disability. It is well that the people of Peterborough and Canada should become cognizant of these facts, as it will point out to them the necessity for our existence in order to impress upon the government, the injustices being meted to men, such as are enumerated below.

Pension Injustices.

Take the case of Comrade "A," who when he enlisted in 1916, was a strong and perfect specimen of manhood. He served a considerable period in France, and, through the force of the explosion of a heavy shell received severe injuries to his back and side, and is now suffering from shell-shock and is unable to follow his previous occupation. Yet this man was discharged and told he had no pensionable disability. This case I took up with the Board and after considerable argument, was successful in having the man re-examined. The result was that upon the findings of the Board he was awarded a small pension, being placed in Class 19 in the pension list.

Then again, we will take the case of Comrade "B," who enlisted in 1915 and proceeded overseas with his unit, went to France, served with his unit nearly two years, was severely gassed and sent back to Canada and discharged as living no pensionable disability due to service. Consequently this Comrade is thrown upon the labour market unfit to do a hard day's work, no pension and has, to some extent, to depend upon the generosity of a few of his friends for his subsistence. This is another case of injustice and one of many which the G.W.V.A. all over Canada comes in contact with very frequeutly and, were it not for it's efforts on behalf of these unfortunate Comrades, too often they would have to suffer without the authorities paying any attention to their appeals.

Then I come to the case of the widows who have very often been sorely tried in their anxiety as to what was going to happen to them during the period of adjustment of pension, and too often some of these women have to wait three and four months for their cheques, and meanwhile they have been faced with the prospects of starvation, and fear of the landlord coming and turning them from their homes for non-payment of rent. Here again, Comrades, your Association has come along and said, "Let us be your friend; we will see that your pension is hurried along. We will help you until you receive your payment from the government.

Only this week I have been successful in getting a pension granted to a widow and her two children whose husband recently died in this city from the effects of his wounds in France.

These are only a few instances of the many activities in which we are engaged, and every day I am inundated with complaints of this description, many of them being palpably unjust, and I say, Comrades, that was there no such organization at the G.W.V.A., that many cases of grave injustice would be perpetrated, and it is through our organization that you have access to the proper authorities.

The G.W.V.A. says: "Let's be your friend and adviser. We understand you. We are your Comrades and it is through the G.W.V.A. that thousands of cases, such as I have just mentioned, have been adjusted, claims settled, wrongs set right, injustices corrected, which otherwise might have remained a running sore in the side of Canadian citizenship and professed patriotism.

It is for this purpose that returned men have banded themselves together, and, as long as we adopt a safe, sound and aggressive policy, rightly and wisely guided, we should be of incalculable benefit to our beloved Dominion. But a policy of aggression built on the use of force and backed by irresponsible agitators of Bolshevist type, would be a deplorable menace to the best interests of Canada and contrary to the very principle for which many of us fought and bled, and for which so many of our comrades so nobly laid down their lives.

The Finances.

Now I come to the finances of the Branch. In this respect, I want to congratulate you on the splendid condition of your finances; your total receipts for the period since the amalgamation with the G.W.V.A. are $7,669.91; the total disbursements are $5,218.97. This leave you with a balance credit of $2,450.94.

This, taken together with value of your furniture, which is estimated at $1,857, making your total assets $4,307.944. In this respect, great credit reflects upon your entire executive, who have worked so assiduously to bring about such splendid results, and I trust you will show your appreciation of their efforts by according them a very hearty vote of thanks. An itemized statement will be placed in the rooms, so that every Comrade can see how their money has been spent.

Another great feature of the year has been the formation of a "Veterans' Band." This was made possible by obtaining the instruments formerly belonging to the 93rd Battalion. In pointing this out, I cannot let the occasion pass without referring to splendid services of Comrade Hughes, the eminent Bandmaster of the 93rd Batt., who has devoted his time to promoting and making such a splendid success of the band; also to Comrade Morrison, your President for 1919, who has also devoted considerable time in this direction and our thanks must go out to one and all of the members who have by their splendid spirit made the band such a success.

In regard to the band I would say that your executive was compelled to draw upon its exchequer to equip its

OTTAWA WINTER FAIR INCLUDES NEW FEATURES

The Ottawa Winter Fair is off to a good start, and if the attitude of the Live Stock Exhibitors and Live Stock men generally can be taken as an indication of the success of the Show to be held in January next, it will undoubtedly be the best ever held in Ottawa. The attitude of Live Stock men throughout Ontario and Quebec would indicate that they will be out in large numbers and with large exhibits of Live Stock at the coming Winter Fair.

The Prize Lists of the Ottawa Winter Fair are out and may be obtained from the Secretary, Mr. W. D. Jackson, Carp, Ont. By the revise Prize List over $16,000.00 is offered in cash prize money for exhibits of Live Stock, Seeds and Poultry. New classes have been added to the Prize List in every department, and as a result the Prize List is very complete and considerably extended over previous years. In the Cattle Department Bull Calf classes have been added for all breeds and there will undoubtedly be a big entry in these new classes as the exhibitors have been demanding for some time that Bull Calf classes be added to our Prize List.

One of the most important features of the show will be the Harness Horse Classes which will be shown in the large arena Judging Ring every night during the Winter Fair. A large number of Harness and Saddle Horse Classes have been added and from the enthusiasm shown by Harness Horse men the Board of Directors are confident that the Harness and Saddle Horse Classes at the Winter Fair will equal the best Harness Horse Show ever put on in Eastern Ontario.

The continuation of the Winter Fair in January next, the excellent accommodation offered and the additions to the Prize List, should be a big inducement for farmers and breeders in Eastern Ontario and Quebec to exhibit their stock or produce at the Winter Fair and not only share in the large amount of prize money which will be distributed, but keep abreast with the advancement of the various lines of agriculture which will be represented, and which has such a bright future.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS THAT PROMOTE SAVING HABIT

War Savings Stamps as Christmas Present New Idea in Canada

War Savings Stamps as Christmas gifts is a new idea in Canada, but there is good reason to think that it will be very popular this year. The reason it has not been adopted before is because not until recently have War Savings Stamps been introduced into this country.

The stamps make a very fine present, for not only are they always worth the money paid for them, but a great deal more, since they bear interest at 4½ per cent. compounded half-yearly. They thus bring a good return and, at the same time, promote the habit of saving.

A War Savings Stamp costs only $4, and may be had at any bank, money order post office, or the principal railway stations. Those who cannot pay $4 down should buy one or more Thrift Stamps, which cost 25 cents each, and which are really first of sixteen instalments for a War Savings Stamp.

The ordinary gift soon loses its original value, but here is one that becomes more valuable every day.

B. F. HUBBARD GAINED 50 POUNDS

Had Almost Given Up Hope of Getting Well When He Began Taking Tanlac.

"Well, sir, I don't know what the people may think when I tell them I have actually gained fifty pounds in a little less than three months by taking Tanlac, but it's the truth, and I don't believe I could feel any better than I do right now," said B. F. Hubbard, foreman of the American Express Stables at Lincoln, Neb., and living at 1000 L Street, recently.

"I had suffered from indigestion, nervousness and rheumatism, until I had just about given up hope of ever getting well. My appetite left me entirely, and what little I did eat seemed to do me harm instead of good. Gas would form on my stomach and almost cut off my breath, and I had such awful smothering spells at night that I could hardly get any sleep. I was badly constipated, had almost unbearable headaches and would get so dizzy at times that I would almost tumble over. I had rheumatic pains all over by body, couldn't raist my hands to brush my hair and my legs were so stiff and painful that I could hardly walk and my wife used to have to help me in and out of the buggy, I had fallen off seventy pounds in weight and was just a skeleton of what I was when my troubles began.

"I was in miserable shape and do what I would I got worse until I began taking Tanlac. One day I saw in the paper where a man had been relieved of similar trouble to mine by taking Tanlac, so I got me a bottle at once and have never seen anything like it. In just a few days my appetite was so big that I could hardly eat enough and from that time on I have picked up in weight and strength rapidly. My stomach trouble, rheumatism and nervousness are all gone. I don't have a headache nor a pain of any kind, and I sleep good and feel fine all the time. My wife has also taken Tanlac with splendid results, and we are glad of the chance to tell everybody about it."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co. Ltd.; in Havelock by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield by Tanner Drug Co. Ltd.; in Fowler's Corners by W. A. Hunter; in Gelert by A. J. Scott; in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

Much Good Work Done by G.W.V.A.

members with uniforms. This was made possible by instituting a coal competition, which realized $316. In passing, I desire to thank those Comrades who assisted us in making this competition such a success.

Another feature of the year's work has been the establishment of a Decoration Sunday, which is to take place annually on the second Sunday of July of every year, when the two cemeteries are to be visited and all the graves of our departed Comrades, who have died since the otubreak of hostilities decorated. This ear it was a decided success and augurs well for future occasions. I would like to say that on occasions of this kind, that it is a duty of every Comrade to make an effort to attend out of respect for the departed Comrades.

Your annual church parade was held at St. John's church this year and it has been decided to attend St. Peter's Cathedral next year.

This Branch was represented at both the Dominion and Provincial conventions at Hamilton and Toronto and much good work in connection with the Association was accomplished.

Deaths During the Year.

I have to record, with deep regret, the passing of two of our comrades, in the persons of Comrade Fred Haylock and Comrade Stanley Kidd, in each instance the funeral was attended by a bod of Veterans. I would like to add that during the recent epidemic of Spanish influenza, many of our comrades, who succumbed to this dreadful malady, were attended by six pall bearers from the Branch and a wreath sent in each instance. During the period of this epidemic your rooms were closed by order of the M.O.H., and as a result, the income from the billiard table was cut off. I should like to say that the income from this source was very satisfactory and enough has been taken each month to pay the salary of your caretaker.

I was also able to get some 140 tons of coal for our members, and the wives and mothers of our Comrades overseas In connection with this I would like to mention H. B. Taylor & Son, to whom we are indebted to for their co-operation in supplying us at the time the shortage was so acute in the city.

I would like to mention a few facts about the Christmas treat to the children which will be held on Saturday next. At the time of writing this report, the total receipts were $420.00. The response to our appeal for funds has been most liberal. To Comrade Mills we are indebted for securing for us the armouries, and lighting and heating free. This event promises to be an even greater success than last year.

Since we have been organized the branch has paid out to the suffering, and the needy in various forms of relief $1,857. This has been paid out of the Relief Fund, and there is still a balance of $1,761.55, including $1,000 invested in Victory Bonds.

Here I want to say a word in connection with your retiring President, Comrade Staunton. No Comrade has worked harder than he has for the success of your branch. It has been my pleasure to have worked under him during his term of office, and I have always found him conscientious in his work and always willing to enter into anything that was to be of some benefit to the members, and I regret he did not see his way clear to accept the position on the executive, as his experience and advise would undoubtedly have been valuable, and I want to personally thank him for his assistance during the time that we have been associated together.

I also want to convey my thanks to the other executive officers, who have always given me every assistance.

We are also indebted to the Press, who have always given us every assistance in the way of publicity whenever required to do so.

Montreal Police Union Heads Tells Him to Pack Belongings.

MONTREAL, Dec. 18.—There will be no strike, but Montreal must bow its neck to the police union. At twelve o'clock yesterday Captain Carl, head of the police union, entered police headquarters and found Chief Belanger there.

"You're still on duty, I see," he remarked.

"I'll pack up," replied the chief.

"How long will it take you to get out?"

"I'll be finished to-day."

'All right, see that you do finish to-day," was the union representative's parting shot.

CARLOAD OF WHISKEY SEIZED IN ORILLIA

Last week Inspector Fisher got wind of a shipment of whiskey passing through Orillia and upon investigation, in company with Chief Reid found a carload containing fifty-five barrels of whiskey on a siding in the freight yards. To be on the safe side the inspector at once seized the car, which was shipped from Corby distillery, and was consigned to the collector of Inland Revenue, Winnipeg. After consulting Mr. Saunders Mr. Fisher reluctantly released the whiskey as he found the shipment under these conditions to be perfectly legal. What is going to happen to this liquor when it reaches the prairie provinces? That is what the thirsty ones in Orillia want to know.—Orillia Times.

33rd Battery Boy Is Threshing Grain For French Farmers

Corporal F. W. Eggleton, of the 33rd Battery, writing from Bethune, France, to his parents, who live at 456 Aylmer street, indicates the plight of the French people returning to their wrecked homes to start life anew:

Bethune, France, Nov. 24, '18.

Dear Mother and Father,— It is quite a while since I heard from you, but I hope you are both well, and I also hope you will spend a happy Christmas, knowing that the war is over. I hope to be back very soon now, but not for Christmas. I am quite well, and have plenty to do in the office. We are still busy threshing grain for the French farmers. We returned to this town a few weeks ago. You will remember we were driven out last February by the enemy. I had a splendid time here last winter, but now the place has been shelled so badly, I hardly recognized it again. The civilians are coming back gradually, many of them to find the homes they left completely destroyed. It is pitiful to see them trying to pick out bits of furniture from the heaps of bricks and mortar.

We managed to find a billet in one of the very few houses that was standing, and I am pretty comfortable.

I have received all the papers you sent. Many thanks. My officer tells me we shall get a short time in England before we sail for Canada. That will be fine, eh? I think I have been very fortunate in this campaign to have come through without much damage and to have Freddy safe. I wouldn't have missed the experience for anything. I hope I shall be able to get some sort of clerical work when I get back. I am qualifying for it now alright. I have been in this office for fifteen months. I should like to get into the Civil Service if there is a chance.

Don't neglect to write just because the war is over. Remember we have got to carry on for some months yet. My best love and best wishes for your health. My love to Flo and Millie.

Mr. Vincent Eastwood Points Out Pressing School Problems

In Statement With His Retirement Urges the Need of New School in South Ward and Also of a Technical School—The Last of the Old Guard.

WAR INTERRUPTED PLANS

With his retirement from the Board of Education of which he has been a member for fifteen years, Mr. Vincent Eastwood in the following statement surveys Peterborough's school problems that are demanding immediate and careful solution. They have been pressing upon the Board during the war years, but were set aside because of the financial demands upon the people for patriotic works. Temporary relief which the Boarad provided this year has been satisfactory, but it was only intended to accommodate the overflow of pupils in the South Ward until the ratepayers were freed from the obligations of the war. Mr. Eastwood is the last of the old guard, and it is characteristic both of him and his former associates that his review is not a retrospect of accomplishments, but is a thoughtful forecast of the city's educational needs. The last of the veterans has been true to their ideas and ideals of service, showing that same intelligent anticipation of the demands which the growing city thrust before the Board and found them always prepared. Mr. Eastwood makes no reference to his own share in the past year's business of the Board of which he was chairman, but reminds the ratepayers of the work of to-morrow. This was one of the fine qualities of the old school trustees such ts D. W. Dumble, B. E. Ackerman, W. H. Hill, the late Dr. Burnham, John Crane, Dr. Morrison, and others.

Mr. Eastwood's summary, a valedictory it might be called, follows:

The Board of Education is preparing to take very important steps during the year 1919. The plan of educational development, which was interrupted by the war, will be removed.

This plan involves the providing of adequate and suitable accommodation for all pupils, and also the establishment of an institution that will give suitable instruction and training to the large class of boys and girls and young men and young women who may be about to enter or who have already entered industrial life.

A New School.

A new Public school will have to be erected in the South Central district, as the present building is inadequate in size and unsatisfactory in many other respects. The new building will be modern in all respects. It will be equipped with manual training and household science departments, so that the children of the southern end of the city will not be denied much longer the privilege of pursuing these important and very practical subjects. This training will prepare the pupils and lead up to the wider training of the industrial and technical school.

Technical Training.

The larger question of providing industrial and technical training will be developed in conjunction with the Education Department. It is even hoped and believed that the Federal Government will come to the aid of the provinces in this very important matter.

Peterborough is one of the growing industrial centres of the province, and not only needs, but is entitled to, a technical sehcol.

The Board is fully alive to the necessity of technical and industrial education and steps are being taken to bring about the desired result.

The Board is practically a unit on the policy above outlined.

A wise girl always pretends to be a little more daffy than the young man she is planning to face the parson with.

Between two evils some men always pick up the wrong one.

"THE CLASH"

By MR. W. H. MOORE.

Discusses Relations Between French and English in Canada — "Less Teutonic Stupidity and More British Enlightenment Needed by Canadian Leaders of Educational Thought," Says Mr. R. R. Hall.

Mr. W. H. Moore, formerly Secretary of the Canadian Northern Railway, has lately written a most interesting and instructive book entitled "The Clash."

It is a study in Nationalities in general but in particular it is an impartial examination and criticism of the clash in the ideals and sentiments of the French and English Canadians.

The Author's scholarly attainments in history and political philosophy his widely extended knowledge of Canadian public affairs and of public men and his close observation and intimate knowledge of every day life among the people of Ontario and Quebec, has enabled him to treat this highly inflammable subject satisfactory to those who love justice, liberty and toleration.

"The Clash" should be read and studied by every one interested in our educational, social and national problems.

It is not a defence of the French Canadian who persistently refuses to learn the English language, even though it would be in his own interest to do so and on the other hand it contains no words of comfort to the English Canadian who would adopt Tuetonic methods to ruthlessly impose his language and culture on the French Canadian.

The Teuton failed to force his language on the Pole and he failed to force the German language through the prison bars of his jails on those who clung to the French language in Alsace-Lorraine.

A Forlorn Hope.

Does the English Canadian in Ontario, hope to be more successful, than the Tueton has been in Germany, in forcing his language and culture on an unwilling Canadian minority?

Why adopt coercive and tyrannical measures in Ontario when better results can be achieved by adopting not the Tuetonic, but the British way?

Mr. Moore says the difference between the Tuetonic and the British way lies in this:

Britain after conquest removed the old casing and substituted for it her own; but the new casing, the British state, has been charged with protecting the encased; the national thoughts and national habits of mind have been preserved and left free for development within the land acquired. That is the distinction between 'Britain's way' and 'the other'. That is the essence of Britain's sense of freedom. I would if I could write it indelibly in the minds of all who have inherited Britain's responsibilities, ... While each man is free to interpret Christain teachings for himself, free to reject the maltogether, free to refuse to regulate his private and public conduct by them, British men in their corporate action may not deliberately refuse to apply Britain's cardinal principle of polity." Here lies the difference between the British constitution and other forms of government, namely, that liberty is its end, its use, its designation, drift and scope as much as grinding corn is the use of a mill,' said John Adams in 1766 —and the test of liberty is, to repeat again the words of Lord Acton—'the amount of security enjoyed by minorities.' We cannot be un-British in spirit and, permanently remain a part of Britain. Our conduct has not yet gone before the world's review, and when it does, remembering Toynbee's words, 'where a minority has clung to its native speech, it has been allowed to retain it,' we cannot in all conscience have it added —except in Ontario and Manitoba.

"Nor must we overlook the consequence of our refusal to abide by the arbitrament of the Golden Rule and the spirit of British justice. It is an immutable law that the majority as well as the minority, the strong as well as the weak (English Canadians as well as French-Canadians), must each in its way suffer the violation of man's proper relation to man. As A. Maude Royden tells us in "Towards a Lasting Settement": 'To crush out all those who have the right to exist but not the power to enforce that right, is to commend to one's own lips, not the 'choice wine' of humanity, but—

"The bitter dregs of woe,
Which ever from the oppressed to the oppressor flow."

Less Stupidity.

If the leaders of Educational thought, in Ontario had less Tuetonic stupidity and had more enlightenment on the British way, a large number of our Canadian young men both French and English, would now be thoroughly educated in both the French and the English languages and would now be prepared and equipped to go forth as Canadian advance agents to the continent of Europe (where the French language is freely spoken) and do valuable National service in finding a market there for the products of our farms, our mines, our forests and our fisheries and in exchange for them bring back to our shores "bales of goods and bags of gold."

ST. THOMAS ADOPTS QUARANTINE METHODS

ST. THOMAS, Dec. 18.—In order to more successfully cope with the "flu" epidemic, which is daily becoming more serious here, the board of health at a special emergency meeting held here decided to use quarantine methods, placarding all places infected with the disease and adopting all the necessary restrictions used in the cases of other communicable disease. A resolution was also passed prohibiting all private and public dances, and warnings were issued to merchants that they must regulate the number of customers in their stores and preventing crowding as much as possible. Children under eleven years of age, whether accompanied by their parents or not, are prohibited from attending the picture shows until the epidemic has been conquered.

SENTENCES MAY BE SHORTENED

OTTAWA, Dec. 18. —By process of court-martial some heavy sentences have been imposed on deserters from Canadian draft battalions. In Winnipeg, the other day, one man was sent to penitentiary for life. In Ottawa recently, a deserter was given twenty years. Several other sentences have been imposed. There is authority for the statement that these punishments, to a considerable degree, were designed to be exemplary. When peace is finally concluded, or within a reasonable time thereafter, it is intimated that clemency may be extended, more particularly for those whose sentences have been for long terms.

Voice of The People

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir: I have been interested, as doubtless others have, in the S. O. S. calls you have been sending out that good and true men should come to the rescue of the city. So far only to a limited extent have your appeals been answered. I do not think that newspaper pleading will bring into the field such men as you say you have in such a mind as you have. They are not to be got by a paragraph, no matter how fervent or imploring. May I give you the reason:

We concede that it is the duty of any citizen to do what he may to advance the interests of the municipality in which he lives and may have his stake. That manifestation of interest is what we term "Public Spirit," the expression of a wish to be helpful. Helpful, according to a man's light and to his ability. It does not follow that he will always prove a success, in a public way, for while he may make a success of his business he may turn out a reasonably indifferent administrator. He served a long experience in his business and practically none in the other.

Good, medium or poor, as to accomplishment, he deserves commendation because he has tried. He tried where the others held back. In a general experience he receives nothing but knocks, and retires, to leave the said-to-be field to others.

Take the present. You have had ten men in the City Council. These, so far as I have read what you have written, you propose to dismiss without one word of appreciation for what they have done, and tried to do. You plainly call for "better men," the assumption being in your mind, and which you transfer to paper, that those who have served you for one or two years are not of the desired class.

My dear sir, what this old world needs at this present time, as much as anything, is a little decent appreciation—of our returning soldiers, of our helpful citizens who have done four years of war work at home, of your council that has tried to administer your affairs at a time when costs were leaping upwards, to keep things running smoothly, and not plunge the city into debt. That policy has been the reflection of both domestic and private policy. To be reasonably economical.

The very thing that you are persistently doing, knocking by implication, is what is keeping "better men" out of your civic affairs. You know it, too. Why not change the tactics. Use a little encouragement. Instead of sending out printed paper calls, send responsible men to do the errand. Let me give you this pertinent incident of a few days ago.

Four men got together, one evening of last week, and had sent for a citizen who has given years of public service. The chairman received him and told him that the idea was that he should now run for the council, as they needed "better men" to look after our city and affairs. That a policy of expansion was needed. That men of large grasp, decision and executive ability, were needed."

Our friend, pertinently put the question, "I suppose, Mr. Chairman, you will, yourself, be a candidate?" The reply was, "Not on your life. I wouldn't be an alderman for a cow, and I am fond of cattle." No one of the four would even consent to look at a nomination. Derided the idea. The decision of the quartette riled our friend who stood back and landed into the meeting on good grounds that they wished a man to do something that they would not take the risks of themselves—an election. The meeting adjourned.

That, Mr. Editor, is a sample of the thought of many. So long as you persistently deride, sneer, belittle your councils, from year to year, you will get councils that you think you have the license to belittle. You will not get others, who would place themselves in the position. If any of the members of the present council do not measure up to the high water mark, I as a member, know it. But I am, as a member, loyal to the council. I know how earnestly and faithfully they have worked. That endeavour deserves commendation even if it has not bourne fruit in the way you think it should.

For instance, take the Committee and Service, of which I have had the honor to be chairman for the last two years. For a time previously, and at intervals, there was friction and discord, both in force and administration. Likewise a halted service. It is to-day in the highest state of efficiency it has ever known. There is peace, harmony, comradeship and good feeling in the force. Three years ago you had fifty-six changes in the service personnel in one year. This year you have had practically two. What does that spell. Not the result of accident, but diplomacy and some horse sense, I hope. Both are excellent in their places. Especially if they bring results.

That same committee, with the kind concurrence of the Mayor, the Chairman of the Finance Committee, and the Council at large, has done what no other Council or Committee of any municipality in Ontario has done, and that is to ensure that 1500 tons of coal are in store to meet any emergency that may arise. That there shall never be a repetition of the hand-sleigh and soap-box coal line of wives and mothers that stood in the cold, the bitter cold, last January, outside the coal offices, pleading for a bag of coal.

Peterboro is safe, so far as fuel is concerned. I know of no other place that is. And yet you propose to dismiss the men who have done that public service, taken time and thought and anxiety, send them off without one word of commendation for the effort and success. Do you think that you will get men who will do it again. Other chairmen, and other committees have been efficient and prudent, but they can speak for themselves. It is true that I have from time to time asked the press to refrain from printing details of our fuel operations and enterprise, that the supply might not be stopped. But that request did not invalidate your opportunity, had you so desired, to express appreciation of the action and work of members of the council.

It is with cheerful satisfaction that I read your calls to the public to get ready to "Hitch the Municipal Chariot to a Star," of "Seeing the City Safe and Sane for Sixty Thousand," and other clarion calls. Expansion spells money. This city has in sight for its municipal needs contemplated expenditures that will absorb every dollar of indebtedness that it ought to incur. When your rate straddles up to around 36 mills on the dollar, people begin to ask if Peterboro is a good place to locate in. When we issue $300,000 to cover the bridge, another $900,000 to cover the sewage disposal plant, find another $80,000 for a new school, take over the street railway and clap on another $400,000, with a few odd trifles that will crop up, we shall have about all that we can handle without doing much expansion. Go to your City Trust Commission and get a clear idea of the situation for the next five years. That safe and sane body of men have no ideas with regard to "Hitching the Municipal Chariot to a Star." Not by a jugfull. What Peterboro needs for the next seven years is to be taken care of. You bet your life!

Try and be a little appreciative, and encouraging. Throw the vinegar that you use out of the bottle when writing civic editorials, and put in a little soothing syrup, and watch the results. You may lead where you can never drive. We are now to get away from ward representation. One for all and all for one is to be our motto. Help to get our municipal housekeeping in first class order, not cheese-paring, not extravagant. Making progress in a sane and helpful way. It is only one month since the war stopped. It may take a week of years to find our feet, and strike our stride, and do the things we have to do, but we are not to do all at once.

Yours hopefully,
F. H. DOBBIN.

ALDERMAN DOBBIN'S VIEWS.

In a letter to The Examiner Ald. F. H. Dobbin contributes some most interesting comments on municipal affairs—comments that will be read respectfully because Mr. Dobbin has had a long experience in the field of civic service and his letter is based on that experience. It is his contention that constant criticizing of the present council and its predecessors has made it difficult to bring new men in the field.

"You have ten men in your City Council," he writes. "These so far as I have read what you have written, you propose to dismiss without out one word of appreciation for what they have done and tried to do. You plainly call for "better men" — the assumption being in your mind and which you transfer to paper that those who have served you for one or two years are not of the desired class."

Mr. Dobbin has apparently read into The Examiner's articles on the coming elections a series of conclusions that are not justified. It was not the intention to convey the impression that there were not good men in our present City Council, nor was there any desire to insinuate that the members of the council had not endeavoured to serve according to their various abilities. The point that The Examiner has endeavoured to bring out is that the council of this year is not made up as a whole of the type of men that the citizens of Peterborough would select as managers of a private business which presented so many problems as the successful direction of public affairs during the period of reconstruction will entail. It is not necessary to go into details over this point—it is enough to say that by no stretch of the imagination could the council of 1918 be considered the strongest managing board that could be selected in Peterborough, and to repeat the opinion that in view of the problems of the future this city needs not merely a fair council or a good council, but the very best council that can be found in our citizenship. It might be that some of the members of this year's council would be considered as desirable members of such an aldermanic board—that is a matter for the judgment of the ratepayers.

There has been no desire on the part of The Examiner to be unfair to our civic rulers. As Alderman Dobbin points out the management of the fuel situation has left Peterborough in a much safer and more desirable position in regard to a coal supply than other municipalities, and for this the council as a whole, and the particular members who had this work in charge, have earned the gratitude and thanks of the people of Peterborough. It is true that the affairs of the fire department have been carefully managed and the smoothness with which the department has been operated reflects credit upon Alderman Dobbin as chairman. In other matters that have came up during the year The Examiner cannot speak so approvingly of the council's action. The restriction of the hours during which restaurants may open on Sunday seems a piece of blue law legislation for which there was no necessity, and there does not seem any reasonable excuse why the revised building by-law, designed to minimize fire risks, should have been so curtly rejected by the council. These, however, are not in themselves matters grave enough to condemn the members of the council as inefficient or incapable.

The record of this year's aldermanic board is before the people. The problems that have to be handled next year have been enumerated by Mayor Duncan and by the press. The ratepayers know both the men and the tasks they have confronting them. If they are satisfied that the managing board cannot be strengthened, that there are no other men in Peterborough whose judgment, experience and ability would be of value in handling these problems, there is nothing more to be said. But are they satisfied?

The ceremony took place at 8 o'clock and was performed by Rev. J. A. McKenzie of Knox Presbyterian Church, Peterboro assisted by Rev. J. H. Beck of the Apsley Methodist church, the bridal party standing under an arch of evergreens decorated with flowers from the centre which was suspended a large white bell. The bride entered the room leaning on the arm of her father to the strains of Mendelsohn's wedding march played by Miss Ella Brown. Miss Matilda McFadden acted as bridesmaid and the groom was ably supported by his brother Mr. Joseph Tucker. The bride was handsomely dressed in blue satin and wore a veil and wreath of orange blossoms. The bridesmaid also looked charming in blue silk poplin.

Farmers Amend Constitution to Give Women Equal Rights at the Session Yesterday

Declares Canadians Must Shake Off the Grinding Yoke of Big Moneyed Men—Air Grievances Against the Government.

TORONTO, Dec. 19.—Another advance in the Femininist movement took place yesterday when the United Farmers of Ontario admitted women on an equal basis with men by unanimously changing the constitution of the association. The change was made without debate, unlike the change from 50c to $1 of capitation tax, which was warmly debated. These two changes in the constitution were the most important pieces of business at the opening session.

"We want to remember we are meeting as a Province, and, as the greatest democrat said, 'All men are brothers.' We want to respect the opinions of all," declared R. H. Halbert, president of the United Farmers of Ontario, in opening the convention yesterday. "I hope you men will respect the chair, respect your calling, and respect yourselves," he continued, adding that the business of the convention was the business of Ontario and the Dominion of Canada.

"We are living in a time when the barque of civilization labours in the trough of the greatest storm it has ever encountered," continued Mr. Halbert. "Let us then have concord between the races that providence has decided should work together for the common ends of humanity. Urban and rural labouring people must cultivate closer relationship if both are to profit and fit themselves for the new conditions.

"'The powers that be' would not like to see this closer relationship, for they are quick to see the approaching storm and naturally scream with fear. There is the same tone of arrogance, the same spirit of domination, and the same appeal to a superficial morality, but before international democracy succeeds in making the world safe for itself there will have to be a certain amount of comforts for all, but unearned luxuries and Government privileges for none. Now that the war is over, and we hope never to be repeated, our attention naturally turns to the reconstruction period.

Democracy Worth Fighting For.

"It would be one of the saddest tragedies of this war if the countries that have made democracy their slogan in the overthrow of German militarism should borrow the iron heel of Germany as a means of accomplishing their purpose. The blood of the martyrs was the seed of the church, so will the prosecution of honest tillers of the soil be the fertile seeds of democracy. We cannot order democracy as we would our groceries or a suit of clothes.

"It is our duty to see that we have a democracy worth fighting for.

"We cannot lift ourselves by tugging at our own boot laces. Militarism has received its deathblow in Europe. The battle of the future will be fought with ballots, not with bullets. It will not be a battle of nationalities, a race war, but a battle against moneyed aristocracy, who own the country financially and control it politically and not in the public interests. They control at will the market where they buy their supplies and the market in which they sell their products—everything the people grow, produce and have to buy, are in the hands of corporations and small groups of people who are directors of our banks and railways, and owners of our industries.

"And we talk of democracy and liberty. Are you who were born in Canada and you who have come here by choice from other countries, who have helped to transform the wilderness and forests into an agricultural country, also you who have fought in the trenches, going to have anything to say in this reconstruction period, or are you going to let this country become a country of serfs and peasants exploited and ruled by commercial and financial barons?

Parting of the Ways.

"But things are changing rapidly, and we have to face the crisis of to-day in the world's development. Nothing like it has ever occurred before in the history of the world. We are absolutely at the parting of the ways; one way leads to democracy, safety and peace, and the other leads to absolute ruin.

"It has been said that every German workman worked with a soldier strapped to his back, that is, he had to support himself and family and also a soldier. The English workman carried a squire or lord. The American workman carried a politician. The Canadian farmer carries the plutocrat and profiteer, but the day is not far distant when even such distinguished personages will have to get off and walk; the farmers are thinking for themselves even if the peanut politician says he mustn't.

"We were bribed with promises of exemptions, which were repudiated as soon as the votes were secured; we were choked with the cry of patriotism and told to be good because that was the way to win the war. Patronage still rampant joy-rides for Cabinet Ministers, while common people and soldiers' dependents are on the verge of starvation. Freedom of speech must be maintained, autocracy in Canada must disappear with autocracy in Europe."

Says Farmers Ill Used.

Secretary J. J. Morrison, referring to the operation of the M.S.A. in relation to farmers, said:

"The Government that had approached the farmers on the eve of the election with promises not to disturb their industry, as production was so very necessary, and therefore the farmers might feel quite free to support them at the polls—this same Government coldly, without one word of explanation, broke forth, and called their skilled labour to the colours. And the press, the same press that had assured the farmers on the eve of the election that production was their bit and that they should support this good Government that so realized their worth, now called our young men slackers.

"From the great Ottawa convention has sprung the Farmers' Publishing Co., Ltd., with an authorized capitalization of $500,000. A bright future seems assured to this venture.

"The U. F. O. has now 615 clubs, a gain of 300 this summer, as against a gain of 115 last year. Our membership stands at over 25,000, a gain of 13,000 as against one of 4,000 last year."

Face Big Problems.

"Reconstruction will not be real unless we are to have something that is different to what we had before the war," declared Mr. Norman P. Lambert, secretary of the Canadian Council of Agriculture, in addressing the United Farmers' Convention yesterday afternoon.

The new national policy for Canada, as the platform of the Canadian Council of Agriculture is named, formed the basis of Mr. Lambert's remarks.

"Since 1879 Canada has had a national policy but it is national in name only," declared Mr. Lambert. "The old policy was not in the best interests of Canada as a whole and comparatively few are well off as a result of it. The large proportion of the people have borne the overhead charges that have been established by those who are the beneficiaries. On the other hand the new national policy has been conceived with the view that there should be the greatest good for the greatest number.

"For the first time in her history Canada is confronted with the necessity of standing on her own feet," he said.

"We have been boasting for years about our material resources, but what we need is to transmute those resources into trade and that cannot be done unless we bring the people into the country."

Want Lower Tariffs.

He said that the policy advocated reduction of the cost of living and production. A general reduction of the tariff was needed as it was claimed that at the present time the tariff added a big item to the overhead expense of the agricultural interests. Wealth had not been made by the producers, but by the people who were engaged in the business of distribution and exchange.

Direct taxation as opposed to indirect taxation was strongly advocated by Mr. Lambert. The charge had been made that the farmers wanted to evade this tax, but they were willing that there should be a tax on land values as well as on incomes and business profits.

Mr. Lambert said that the new national policy did not represent any class that embodied the motto adopted by the farmers of the West of "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none."

The financial statement of the U. F. O. showed cash in hand of $7,832.58 and a surplus for the year of $8,758. The balance sheet showed that the income for the year was $12,963.50, and the expenditure during the year $6,227.75.

The association increased the capitation fees from 50c to $1 for each member.

Changing the Make-up.

A motion was moved by Secretary J. J. Morrison to change the constitution so as to secure a director for each Federal electoral district in Ontario. These directors to elect from among themselves the vice-president and secretary-treasurer and will form the executive committee of the U. F. O.

An alternative proposal that a director be appointed for each provincial electoral district was made by a delegate.

Delegate Tucker, of Hastings, said that a director for any county seemed sufficient and would get away from the political aspect of the business. This was unanimously agreed to and carried.

Delegate Tucker explained his

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Cuts and Wounds.

A cut or a wound should not be neglected. To make sure that no germs giving rise to blood poisoning should enter the safest plan is to paint it with tincture of iodine. This gives rise to a little smarting, but it soon passes away. The wound should be kept covered until it is healed with a clean linen rag or with a fold of antiseptic gauze.

When Not to Smoke.

It is quite certain that much may be done to diminish the risk of tobacco amblyopia by paying attention to certain points of personal hygiene. For instance, a rule should be made never to smoke upon an empty stomach, but as far as possible only after meals. It is absolutely bad to smoke before dinner and equally bad to smoke late at night to keep awake at one's work. It should also be forbidden to chew the cigar between the teeth, as many smokers are wont to do.—Hospital.

THE WIFE

BY JANE PHELPS

Brian Apologizes and They Spend a Happy Evening.

CHAPTER XLVI

"I telephoned you, but you weren't at home," Brian said, again flushing painfully. "I felt depressed, not a bit like working, so called you up to ask you to go to the matinee or somewhere. When I found you out, I started to go home then I met Mollie, so took her."

Ruth listened to her husband's elaborate explanation in silence. She couldn't help feeling glad that he had called her up, that he had thought of her; yet she felt terribly embarrassed to have him feel it necessary to explain what he did before Mrs Roberts. What would she tell her husband? Would they think Brian did not care for her, that he was in love with Mollie, or what would they think?

Never had Ruth been so glad to get home.

"Now say what you have to say, and have it over," Brian said when they were alone. "If you would stay at home where you belong, instead of gadding about, working so that you can do things I can't afford to let you do, we would have been together instead of you and Mrs. Roberts going by-yourselves.

"It seems you can always afford to take Mollie King." Ruth was goaded to reply. "But that isn't the point Brian, I was not objecting to the money, but don't you think it looks strange to our friends for you to spend so much time with her?" She tried to speak calmly.

"It's no ones business."

"Very well, if you are going to take that attitude, there is no more to be said. I am sorry I was not at home when you called me up. I thought of calling you, in fact we spoke of calling both you and Mr. Roberts, but Clara said he hated to lose a half day for pleasure. So as long as she didn't phone him, I thought I'd better not either. But I am very sorry now that I didn't call you."

Brian made no reply, and their dinner was eaten almost in silence. Afterward he put on his hat, saying he would be back shortly.

"Don't sit up for me, I may play cards awhile with some friends." he said standing in the open door.

Ruth looked blankly at the closed door. Her first impulse was to run after him. He never had deliberately left her sitting home alone before. Oh dear! how she wished she had kept the fact that her salary had again been raised from him. He had been so impossible ever since.

"Never min', honey, yo ol' mamming wif yo,"

Throwing her arms around Rachel's neck Ruth, for the first time since she had been married, gave way to the discouragement she felt. She sobbed unrestrainedly for an hour, the old nurse crooning over her. Finally she dried her eyes and, sent Rachel to bed. She sat by the window until after midnight, when she too undressed and crept into bed.

She wondered who these friends Brian had spoken of so casually could be, and why he had never mentioned them before. Perhaps he was with that Mr. Clark of whom he had borrowed money. Once she thought: "I wonder if he is with that Mollie King!" but dismissed the idea as unreasonable. He wouldn't leave her alone to spend the evening with Mollie, even if he had taken her to the matinee. He had only done that out of pique because she wasn't at home when he called. Of course he had taken Mollie out when she was away, but that was different. To do it when she was at home, anxious and willing to be with him, either at home or wherever he cared to go, would be too much like intentional neglect.

Finally she fell asleep only to be awakened when Brian stumbled over a chair in the darkness.

"Do switch on the light, dear you'll hurt yourself," she said sitting up in bed, rubbing her eyes. "What time is it?" as he followed her advice.

"About two, I guess."

"Did you have a good time?"

"Yes—pretty fair."

Brian did not volunteer any information as to where he had been or who with. Ruth longed to ask, but restrained her curiosity. Brian must not be made to feel that she didn't trust him.

In this Ruth was wise. His was a nature that could brook no restraint. He had shown this in many ways. So, she realizing it, had tried to keep herself from saying or doing anything that looked like espionage Yet she dreadfully wanted to know where he had been.

The next morning at breakfast, rather as they finished and Brian was about to leave, he said shamefacedly:

"I was rotten to ask Mollie to go to the matinee when you were in town. But I was sore when I met her."

That was all. But all day Ruth was happy because of the half-hearted apology. She knew he meant what he had said, and more. That it was his way of saying he was sorry.

That night they spent the happiest evening they had had since Ruth told him she had been given more money because of her good work. And as she had so many times before, she said to herself:

"If only we could be like this all the time, how happy I should be!"

(To Be Continued)

M. Malvy Goes Into Exile

At the end of it all M. Malvy, former French Minister of the Interior, condemned for "forfaiture," or culpable neglect of duty, to five years' exile from France, without loss of civil rights, went quietly away from the capital in which, through the vicissitudes and various ministries, he had been one of the grand instruments of government. There were scenes and circumstances and small demonstrations which did not amount to much, but the thoughtful spectator considered it impressive, pathetic, tragic, and to some extent even mysterious. So much that was remarkable had been told at the famous trial before the Senate, and so many strange facts had been related by the long procession of witnesses which included four former premiers on the same day, that the sum of testimony had created some confusion from which emerged the impression that M. Malvy had been too kind to interests with which he was sympathetic—culpably and punishably kind, perhaps—but that it was difficult to sift the final essence of fact from that mass of statement, so contradictory sometimes, so vague and indefinite at others, so inconsequential in other places; and then again there was the inevitable question that, with so much said and told, how much had been left untold, and was it possible that human judgment and knowledge could exactly determine as to the precise merits of M. Malvy's actions in existing circumstances in France?

These reflections by those who witnessed the scene of departure were not in the way of intimating that the punishment was unfair and wrong—though many think it so—it might even be much too light, as some say, for the grievance that France had against him. The uneasy feeling was that nobody knew everything, that the whole truth was not and could not be told about these great affaires, and that there is mystery behind them all that renders these slow, difficult, and often halting judicial prosecutions, honest and thorough as they may be, somewhat unsatisfactory.

On the whole, perhaps, M. Malvy may be thought by impartial persons to have got off fairly well, particularly, as it must be said, there is always the chance of a reversal of the judgment or an amnesty. There are to be many changes in France and the rest of the world in the next five years, and it would be rash to suppose that the feeling, the sentiment and the judgment of these present moments will prevail evenly during that period. There is evidence that this was in the minds of M. Malvy's friends when they joined him at the Gare d'Orsay to bid him "Au revoir!" in the evening when the first shadows of twilight were beginning to fall. There had been a little hesitation as to where he should spend his exile The first thought was almost naturally Spain, but then it appeared that there was much to be said for England, and there was a time when it seemed England it would be. But suddenly Spain was decided upon.

A few days were given M. Malvy by the governmental authorities in which to arrange his affairs and prepare for his departure, and he was granted his full freedom for this period. His friends became active on his behalf, but a realization of the state of things indicated that it was inevitable M. Malvy should go into exile. He devoted some of his spare time to preparing a final letter in his own justification to be addressed to M. Deschanel, the president of the Chamber. At last on a Saturday evening, all was ready, and M. Malvy with his family stepped into a taxi to be driven to the Gare d'Orsay, there to take the sub-express for Bordeaux and the Spanish frontier, San Sebastian having been decided upon as the first headquarters.

In the grand hall of the Gare d'Orsay the exile was immediately surrounded by numerous friends and well-wishers. There were deputies, representatives of the Confederation Generale du Travail, other representatives of labor as practiced in the Paris district, including delegations from the Renault and Voisin works, of the railway workers, the midinettes, and others. They shook hands warmly with M. Malvy and uttered words of sympathy, affection and hope. Some of the delegations had brought bouquets of flowers which were handed to Mme. Malvy. The police were exercising a close watch upon the proceedings, and there were some restrictions practiced. At the moment of the departure of the train there was loud cries of "Vive la Republique!" "Vive Malvy!" "A bientot!" "Au revoir!" The exile seemed much affected and gave a cordial word to each. When the engine whistled and the final departure was imminent, there were more cries of "Au revoir!" and "A bientot!" Some one shouted out, "Have you taken a return ticket?" and M. Malvy answered, "No, I leave it to you to deliver it to me." As the train was moving there was a chorus of "Vive Malvy!" "Vive la Republique!" "Vive la France!" Suddenly a solitary individual rushed forward and shouted, "A bas . . . !" but he got no further. The train moved out. Thus he began his exile.

Eleven Sons In Army.

The eleven sons of Mrs. Annie McGill, a widow, of Croydon, England, have served in the army. Five have the 1914 star and one of these has won the D.C.M. Another son was captured with Gen. Townshend and died in a Turkish hospital; a seventh has been a prisoner since 1914; another enlisted as a boy of fifteen and when discharged as being under age was sixteen.

Rather Enjoyed It.

"Humph!" said the man as he limped to the sidewalk and brushed the mud off his hat. "How that takes me back to my boyhood days!"

"Were you hit by an automobile?" asked the policeman.

"No; bicycle. It's the first time I have been hit by a bicycle in twenty years."—Washington Star.

Looking For His Reward.

Infant (in an apparent burst of repentance)—Mother, I took three sweets out of the box.

Mother—It was very wrong of you, darling, but as you have confessed it I will forgive you.

Infant—Well, then, mother, give me one back. I only took two.—Le Figaro.

A Frightened Horse.

Redd—You say the horse ran away as an automobile was passing?

Greene—Yes.

"I thought his horse was accustomed to automobiles?"

"He is, but there was a woman in the tonneau wearing one of those green wigs."—Yonkers Statesman.

His Whiskers Saved.

The Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria, the patriarch of the crowned heads of Europe, some time ago formed the resolution to shave off the whiskers which make his physiognomy so familiar all the world over. The protests of his family and the feeling which the announcement of this decision caused in court circles, however, have induced the aged monarch to reconsider the matter.

Stefansson and His Work

AFTER a period of over five years spent in exploring the previously unknown territory of the Arctic regions, Vilhjalmur Stefansson, commander-in-chief of the Polar expedition which left Canada in June, 1913, arrived recently in Ontario and reported officially to Deputy Minister Desbarats, of the Department of Naval Services. Mr. Stefansson's work has resulted in the collection of valuable scientific information and data.

Stefansson left Ottawa in the month of May, 1913, and proceeded to the coast, leaving Victoria in June. He was commissioned by the Department of Naval Service to explore the then unexplored regions north of Alaska and west of the known Canadian islands. He has not only accomplished this, but in addition has done far more in the way of geographical survey and correction.

The main vessel of the expedition was the ill-fated Karluk, and, in addition, smaller gasoline vessels were added to the expedition at Nome, consisting of the Alaska, Polar Bear and Challenge.

There were thirteen scientific specialists attached to the party and it was necessary, the explorer explained, to go all over the world to secure these technical experts, New Zealand, Australia, England, France, Denmark, the United States and Canada all contributed their share of the brains that were to make the expedition the success that it has proved to be. Six of the scientists hailed from Canada, viz., Dr. R. M. Anderson, Ottawa; Kenneth Gordon Chipman, Ottawa; John J. O'Neill, Mr. Malloch, of Hamilton, and J. R. Cox, geographical survey. The expedition was financed entirely by the Canadian Government, and during the period of exploration there were approximately 100 men in the service. The average number of men with the expedition at any one time was between 60 and 70.

"Many of the news reports carried may have implied that sickness was our greatest enemy," said Stefansson. "That is erroneous. The great enemy of the north is the ice. From Nome we went directly north, and it was not long before we encountered ice difficulties. The most serious blow that we sustained was the loss of the Karluk. The vessel got caught amid the ice floes and was eventually broken up. On board the Karluk was what was probably the finest scientific apparatus and equipment of any polar expedition. The Government spared no expense in fitting us out with the most modern equipment, and all this was lost. Thus our expedition was badly crippled. Our source of supplies was cut off by this disaster and we lived on the country, travelling by sled."

Asked what the approximate area of the unexplored region was, Stefansson said it was about 1,000,000 square miles, of which perhaps 400,000 square miles had been explored.

The scientists with the party included a stratigraphical geologist, a geological mineralogist, two topographers for the making of maps, one terrestial magnetician, one oceanographer to sound the depths and make reports on the sea bottom, etc., one marine zoologist, three anthropologists to study the people, one mammelogist, and the expedition surgeon, Dr. MacKay, of Edinburgh.

The universities represented on the expedition were Toronto, McGill, Massachusetts Technical Institute, Boston, Yale, State College of Iowa, Oxford, Glasgow, Edinburgh, University of Paris, an engineering institute in Sydney, Australia, and Harvard, which was represented by the explorer. Mr. Stefansson took his post graduate course at Harvard and was for some time a lecturer in that university.

Asked when he had received news of the great war, the famous explorer stated that he first knew that there was a war twelve and a half months after it had started. This information was only received by luck. A whaler which had gone a long way out of its ordinary course brought the news to Stefansson, otherwise he would not have heard for two or three years, as he received no official mail for three years.

Regarding living conditions in general, Stefansson stated that he could be quite as comfortable in the northern regions as elsewhere.

Deputy Minister Desbarats paid high tribute to the explorer and the manner in which he had accomplished his object.

"Stefansson has added to Canada several unknown lands in the Arctic region; he has done exceptionally valuable work by exploring oceans. He has discovered, at certain points, that there was only ocean, where land was supposed to exist. His experiments and his work of sounding the ocean and studying the currents, and of studying the behaviour of the ice fields will be most valuable. He has shown the possibility of living on ice floes in the Arctic."

Mr. Desbarats stated that the explorer found that Musk Ox existed in certain regions, and had a theory that there might be some industrial possibilities there. Stefansson had discovered coal also. There was copper in great quantities.

Mr. Desbarats stated that with the loss of the Karluk there had been a serious loss of life.

"Three prominent scientists and two other scientific experts died on Wangle Isle from exposure," said the Deputy Minister. "Malloch, of Hamilton, died there. Then Dr. MacKay, Murray and Beuchag, all noted scientists, left the party after the wreck, and in their attempt to gain land they were lost in the Arctic night and have never been heard of since."

The world's sheep stocks have decreased by 54,000,000 since the war began.

Not Over-paid.

Mrs. Alex. Linton, of Mitchell, was recently awarded a $5 prize for knitting the record number of socks in the district during three months. Her total for the quarter was 83 pairs, making her score since the war's beginning 800 pairs. The five-spot was invested in more yarn.

IF TONGUE IS COATED, BREATH BAD, STOMACH SOUR, CLEAN LIVER AND BOWELS.

Give "California Syrup of Figs" at once — a teaspoonful to-day often saves a sick child to-morrow.

If your little one is out-of-sorts half sick, isn't resting, eating and acting naturally — look, Mother! see if tongue is coated. This is a sure sign that its little stomach, liver and bowels are clogged with waste. When cross, irritable, feverish, stomach sour, breath bad or has stomach ache, diarrhoea, sore throat, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the constipated poison, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

Mothers can rest easy after giving this harmless "fruit laxative," because it never fails to cleanse the little one's liver and bowels, and sweeten the stomach, and they dearly love its pleasant taste. Full directions for babies, children of all ages and from grown-ups printed on each bottle.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask the druggist for a bottle of "California Syrup of Figs,' then see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company."

Sound at the Movies.

In the early days of the movies the only aid to the realism the drummer had was an automobile horn which he would honk as an auto approached on the screen.

To Bernard Walberg, of Worcester, Mass., occurred the idea of manufacturing devices to represent the sounds made by the various objects in the pictures. A writer in the American Magazine describes some of the Walberg devices, which usually are very simple.

For example, the noise of a train is made by rubbing a looped wire brush over a knobbed tin surface. Simple, and yet from this one device the noise king has made thousands of dollars.

The sound of a locomotive bell is made by striking a small leather-covered mallet against a piece of tempered steel. To get the gong of a hospital ambulance, or a fire or police vehicle, the steel is struck by a double steel hammer.

When Walberg wanted to imitate the sounds of the wind he took strips of hard wood, attached them to two metal disks and rubbed them against a piece of canvas, drawn tight over a frame. All the operator has to do is to turn a crank. And after spending weeks at the seashore, listening to the waves, he reproduced the sound of the surf by filling a metal cylinder with buckshot or dried peas which, turned by a crank, gives the sound of the surf. A triangular box lined with shelves and filled with bits of glass gives the effect of broken glass or crockery when the glass falls from the top shelf to the bottom.

To imitate a deafening roar, such as is made by falling buildings, a large roller to which are fastened strips of wood of different sizes is supported on two uprights and turned by a crank. Perpendicular strips of wood come into contact with the strips on the roller as crank revolves. A high-tension spring forces these upright strips against the roller, which, in turn, keeps throwing them back again.

Movie owners often write Walberg asking him for some device, and in a week or two they write him again, saying, "Where's my thunder, or rain storm, or crying baby? Even if it isn't perfect, it will be all right."

COUGHED, COUGHED ALL NIGHT LONG

Terribly wearing on the system is the cough that comes at night and prevents sleep. Sometimes it is a constant cough, cough that will not be quieted.

Sometimes it is a choked-up, stuffed-up feeling that makes breathing difficult, and sleep impossible.

Whatever kind of a cold or cough you have, Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is the remedy you need to cure it, for the simple reason that this valuable preparation combines all the lung healing virtues of the Norway pine tree with which is combined wild cherry bark, and the soothing, healing and expectorant properties of other excellent herbs and barks.

Miss Margaret Landly, Bristol, P.E.I., writes: "I am writing to tell you the benefit I have received from Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup.

Last fall I took a severe cough and cold in my head. I was unable to do anything. At night I could not sleep, but cough, cough, all night long. A friend advised me to use Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and before the second bottle was used, I was entirely cured, and I have found this the best cough medicine I can buy."

Do not accept any other "pine" preparations when you ask for "Dr. Wood's." This remedy has been on the market for a quarter of a century. It is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25c. and 50c. Manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont

EASY TO TELL "FAKE" VIOLIN

Close Observation Should Enable Any Musician to Detect Evidences of Fraud Which Is Common.

The observant student of the violin is often surprised and disgusted by the number of violins he sees on the market which are purposely "faked" and constructed to represent something which they are not. Robert Alton says in London Musical Times. It is safe to state that 70 per cent at least of instruments commonly seen labeled as Betts or Banks or Duke (especially the latter) are "faked" instruments pure and simple, and at the most are not worth more than $5. Yet many instruments of this class are priced at from $25 to $75.

A fair idea of the age of a violin may be formed by taking out the tailpin and noting the color of the blocks and the kind of wood of which they are made. Good violins are fitted with good blocks of pine, well matured before they are put in. Poor blocks betray a cheap, worthless instrument, or a fraud.

Imitation cracks in the belly or back may be detected by looking for them on the inside, through the tailpin hole, if they are not showing on the inside be sure they are not real cracks at all, but there for the benefit (or, rather, very much otherwise) of the unwary.

Some men put the smallest apples on the top of the barrel — also the notice, "Open the other end."

OIL UPON THE WATERS.

It May Be the Means of Preventing Dangerous Fogs at Sea.

For the year ending June 30, 1913, the United States life saving service reported 552 disasters at sea and 93 vessels totally lost on United States coasts. In addition there were 1,191 casualties to small craft. Probably the greatest peril at sea arises from the fogs that prevail in certain waters. Heretofore the chief reliance of the navigator under fog conditions has been on the whistle, the horn, the bell and other appliances to carry warning signals by sound.

The startling statement is now made that by the use of oil the danger from fogs may be minimized and even averted and that such shocking disasters as the recent disaster to the old Dominion liner Monroe in a fog off the coast of Virginia, with the resultant loss of forty-one lives, may be avoided.

The suggestion that oil can be used to prevent fogs comes from Director Onefris of the Fourviere observatory at Lyons, Mass. During a study of the dense fogs which for two months each year cover almost the entire island formed by the junction of the Saone and the Rhone rivers at Lyons he observed that the fogs followed the lines of water beneath the fog banks and conceived the idea of spreading oil to prevent evaporation of the water and the consequent formation of the mists.

One might think this an expensive method, but Director Onefris maintains that the cost of sufficient oil to protect the entire city of Lyons from the visitations of dense fogs would be only $8 a day.—Harold Waters in Leslie's.

TOTAL ECLIPSE OF THE SUN.

Scientists Will Flock to Russia to Study the Phenomenon.

The total eclipse of the sun which is to take place on the 21st day of August of this year promises to be of special importance for science and mainly for the reason that the zone affected by this phenomenon will spread over the greater part of Europe and Asia and consequently will afford our scientists an opportunity of studying the eclipse in districts that are comparatively easy to reach and where scientific investigations can be pursued with every possible convenience.

Coming from the north Atlantic ocean, the zone of totality will reach the Norwegian coast at about 1 o'clock in the day. It will then pass to Sweden by way of the town of Hernodsand, and then on to Russia, directly affecting Kiev and Feodisia, from where it reaches Trebizond at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon and then finally terminates in Persia.

Nearly all civilized countries are preparing expeditions for the study of this eclipse, and a number of private expeditions are also being fitted out. In view of the climatic conditions prevailing, most of them have chosen south Russia for their goal. In Russia extensive scientific preparations have been made for the study of this phenomenon.

For example, all the times, angles of position, etc., for all the Russian towns affected by the eclipse have already been calculated, and all these data will be placed at the disposal of the different scientific expeditions going to Russia.—Exchange.

STOKERS DON'T LAST LONG.

Suicide as a Protest Against Their Hard Lot on Ocean Liners.

"Another stoker's suicide! There's hardly a liner that makes a passage nowadays without the suicide of a stoker or two. It's a kind of protest."

The speaker was a steamship agent.

"It's a kind of protest," he continued, "against the stoker's hard lot. The stoker, you see, works in a temperature of 140 degrees. He works in that temperature eight hours a day. It takes a young man to stand it.

"You ought to see a stoker at the end of his four hour spell. He's a limp, wet, black gnome, clad in a few wet black clinging rags, with eyes as red as blood from the scorching of the fires.

"It takes a young man to stand stoking. A stoker lasts only about six years. A young, strong man, turned in six years into a worthless wreck—it's not right, is it?"

The steamship agent sighed.

"Heaven grant," he said, "that oil fuel will be adopted soon. Oil fuel is the only hope for the poor stoker. But to try to hurry the coming of oil fuel with suicide! As if the stokehole didn't kill them off fast enough."—New York Tribune.

Testing Old Mother Earth.

A scientific survey to determine the exact regular distance between the cities of Berlin, Germany, and Washington will be made by the German geodetic institute at Potsdam in conjunction with the coast and geodetic survey of the United States. Fifty years ago this distance was computed, presumably accurately. The purpose of repeating the computation is to ascertain whether the earth has expanded or contracted during the past half century. The Germans will establish the distance between Potsdam and Horta, in the Azores, and the Americans will ascertain the distance from Horta to Washington.—Engineering Record.

Serious For France.

The French birth rate statistics are worse than ever. According to the calculations established by authority, three children in a family would suffice to maintain the status quo of the population. Unhappily the last report revealed for the first time that the majority of French families have only one child. Births diminished in number last year and in some districts did not succeed in filling the gaps caused by death.

Elephant Grass Paper.

A sample of dried mature elephant grass was sent recently from Uganda to the Imperial institute with the object of ascertaining its suitability for the manufacture of paper. The consignment, which weighed 177 pound when received and 145 after being air dried, is said to have yielded a pulp of good color composed of ultimate fiber rather longer than those of esparto grass and about the same length as those of bamboo pulp. It furnished a fairly good paper, which the British experts expect to be able to improve so as to make this material a suitable and profitable substitute for wood pulp.

Stuffy Head Cleared Of Catarrh Germs By "Catarrhozone"

To catarrh ictims we have just one word of advice—cure it now. The remedy is "Catarrhozone." That it will cure permanently you cannot doubt. Catarrhozone has cured thousands; it will cure you, too.

It acts in two ways: First it destroys the germ—that checks the progress of the disease. Its second action is to heal the sore places the germs caused. Nice to think of breathing little drops of healing to every part of the lungs, bronchial tubes and nasal passages. It is such absolute thoroughness that makes Catarrhozone so effective in grippe, catarrh and colds. Then by its sedative influence upon the mucous surface it clears away the cough and throat tenderness very quickly. We owe something to science that has given us Catarrhozone—that wonderful remedy which so surely enables us to permanently cure disease of the breathing apparatus. We all know that stomach dosing is useless and this departure in the mode of treatment is an advance in medical science that everybody can appreciate and value. Complete outfit of Catarrhozone, which is guaranteed to cure any case of catarrh, asthma, bronchial and throat troubles, lasts three months; price $1.00; smaller size, 50c; trial size, 25c; sold everywhere.

VOLCANOES IN JAPAN.

They May Appear Innocent, but They Are Not to Be Trusted.

In his new guidebook to the Japanese empire T. Philip Terry refers to the fact that in Japan there are upward of fifty active volcanoes of the type of the now notorious Sakurajima, in Kagoshima bay, Kyushu island, and that what might be termed their special custom is to remain quiescent for a few decades—sometimes more than a century—then suddenly to blow up and maim or kill every one within reach of their wrath.

One of the most vicious examples of their treacherous habit is Asamayama, Japan's grouchiest volcano, which rises 8,200 feet above the sea, near Karuizawa, on the Shainano highland. It is often referred to as the Japanese Vesuvius (than which it is 4,230 feet higher), because of its similarity to Italy's terror. Prior to May, 1911, it remained practically dead for 125 years; then it erupted with startling suddenness and killed a number of unfortunate tourists who were standing on its uppermost rim gazing into its yawning crater. The explosions are now frequent and fearsome, and formidable earth tremors are sometimes felt as far east as Tokyo and Yokohama.

Terry warns American travelers with mountain climbing proclivities to beware of the innocent appearing Japanese volcanoes, as they are not to be trusted.

A MATTER OF INITIALS.

Quick Wit Relieves the Tension of an Embarrassing Situation.

An engineer who was repairing a railway line in South Africa found a cozy farmhouse, which he proceeded to occupy.

Promptly came a telegram which read:

G. T. M. wants house.

The engineer wondered who "G. T. M." might be. On inquiry he found it referred to general traffic manager.

"All right," he murmured; "if he can use hieroglyphics so can I."

So he wired back:

G. T. M. can G. T. H.

Two days later there came a very indignant and self impatient gentleman. It was the general traffic manager. In coldly polite tones he asked the engineer what he meant by sending such an insolent message to his superior.

The engineer said innocently:

"Why, it wasn't insolent."

"Wasn't insolent, eh?" snorted the great man. "What do you mean, then, by saying I can G. T. H.?"

"Simply an abbreviation," explained the engineer sweetly. "I wired that the G. T. M., the general traffic manager, can G. T. H.—get the house."—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Superior Officer.

A few days ago the Grays had a social affair—not a family by the name of Gray, but the Cleveland Grays, the crack regiment that uses the armory when concerts are not going on.

Captain Blank, a very swell fellow, was strutting through the crowd when his tailor confronted him. His tailor is a private in the company, but the aristocratic Captain Blank affected not to notice him. The tailor held out his hand.

Captain Blank stared.

"I don't know you, sir," he said.

"Don't know me? Why, I made yer clothes!"

"I beg your pardon," said Captain Blank, unbending hastily. "I'm glad to meet you, Major Cloes!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Antiseptic Ice.

Oxygenized ice is now being manufactured to keep food in refrigerators with the idea of providing antiseptic effect from the ice as well as cold. Peroxide of hydrogen is combined with the water during the manufacture of the ice, so that the ice is really made of oxygenated water, the peroxide being incorporated by a special process at just the right stage of the freezing. In order to distinguish it from other ice it is proposed to dye it slightly with some harmless coloring matter. It must be kept in the ice compartment of a refrigerator, not in direct contact with the food, and the oxygen has the effect of keeping the entire outfit sweet.—Saturday Evening Post.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Decline of Art

By A. W. PEACH

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Frances Acton drew away from the half-finished picture on which she was at work and stared at it with sombre and weary eyes. Into her mind came the quiet, friendly but significant words of the instructor, whom she had given up because he had spoken those words—"You have the artist's instinct and soul, but I am much afraid you will never gain the skill to give it expression." How the words come back! And there she stood, thinking as he thought—a failure in the field of effort she had sworn she would master. The dismal, battered studio in which she stood, with its cheapness and its bareness, added to the despair in her heart.

Suddenly she heard steps above her, then the sound of a thumping, bumping something bounding down the stairs. Frightened, she threw open the door and discovered the sprawling figure of a man slowly adjusting itself to the realization that it had fallen down a flight of stairs.

She fully expected to hear the air displaced by an explosion of more or less vigorous terms. Instead she looked down into the amused face of the fallen and heard him mutter:

"And 'great was the fall thereof'—believe that is in the Bible somewhere." He glanced up at her as he slowly rose. "Pardon me for disturbing you. I assure you I am not in the habit of descending stairs in that fashion, or at that speed."

His face contracted with pain as he balanced himself, and she saw with sudden apprehension that he could not walk, and before she realized what she was doing she took his arm and led him into her studio and to a chair.

He sank into it with a grateful word. In answer to her query whether or not he had broken anything, he remarked: "Nothing so poetic as that. I cracked my shin, but it will be all right in a while."

As his face straightened and he was engaged in wooing the numbed shinbone, she had time to inspect the flotsam that had been cast at her door. He was evidently tall, and beyond any doubt thin; his hair was curly and light, and his eyes were blue—an odd blue, suggesting sunshine and shadow. It was not difficult to guess that he, like all the rest in the dismal old building, was that poor and deluded creature, she thought—a struggling artist.

He looked up, and the whimsical, friendly light in his eyes warmed her very spirit.

"I must thank you for offering me shelter and kindness. Perhaps I may be of service to you—I hope not in like capacity," he added, hastily.

She answered perfunctorily, and he limped out and down the stairs.

She turned back to the picture and picked up the crayon, but her fingers paused and she smiled. She had looked into pleasant, friendly and understanding eyes; and in that great city, where she had seen such eyes but seldom, she felt that she had found a friend.

She had, but trouble was to come. He stopped that evening, some time, luckily, after she had put away the remains of her frugal meal and brought his offering—a small bunch of dewy violets. Then, because she was hungry for companionship, she invited him into the studio, and it was not long before they were deep in the discussion of the art they were seeking to follow.

The old enthusiasm came welling back as she talked to him, and the dark days of the last weeks were forgotten. She told him of her ambition, and he said that he understood. She told him that she would die before she would give up her dream, and he nodded in understanding. Then he told her in turn of himself and his ambition, but he did not say to what extent he would go in trying to make his dream come true. She felt, however, that they were of kindred spirit.

Thereafter the friendship ripened rapidly, and proof of it came in many ways. One day, after an all-day trip among the offices, where she had met courtesy and kindly words that always seemed to hold something in reserve, she returned to find a little lunch all ready.

She was in despair of heart and mind, and the touch of his gentleness was too much. She told him of her fruitless efforts, and then the tears of weariness came, and before she realized what was happening she found herself in his arms and his voice was speaking soothingly.

She drew away sharply, anger at his touch rising instinctively. The startled pain in his eyes caught the bitter words before they were all spoken, and she went on:

"Forgive me, Edmund, you have been a good friend, but I am simply—simply—"

"I know," he interrupted gently; "you are worn out, tired and hungry." He caught her hand and she made a fierce gesture of dissent. "Yes, but you are, and I know it, and I—"

"And you are, too!" she broke in, almost laughing through her tears.

"I am!" he said, bluntly. "So darned hungry I could murder a sandwich man for suggesting one!"

He stared gloomily at the low-burning fire in the grate. After a moment he turned, a light of determination in his eyes.

"Frances, what do you say? I've known you for a week—it seems as if we had been friends for years! I know a place where I can get a chance in the garage business. Let's throw this art stuff up and get up or down to something to eat and a decent place to live. What do you say?"

She looked in his flushed, eager face and earnest eyes. "Am I to understand that you are proposing to me?" she smiled.

He rallied his faculties. "That's it, Frances. I know—"

Her voice was cold. "Thank you, but I'm not interested in the garage business or in marriage, and when I'm proposed to I want it done in a lover's way."

He rose sharp, his face set. "I spoke seriously, in my way. If I have—"

Contrition came. She caught his arm. "Don't say—I know—really, I am too tired. You have been good to me, but I can't give up my dream. I couldn't marry a garage keeper. I might—someone who dreams as I do—you see?"

He nodded, but his face was grave, and she knew that the slash of her first words, when his heart was boyishly open, had gone deep. He looked down into her eyes, and she saw that in his the light had gone out.

"Yet the big thing in the world is happiness," he said simply, and went out, closing the door gently behind him.

She stared at the ashes in the grate that once had been evidence of the quality of the old building, and the ashes seemed to symbolize more than she wished they did.

"He is right," she murmured to herself, as she turned out the lights; "the big thing is happiness."

It rained all that night, and the next day dawned gray, damp and forbidding. She worked feverishly at the picture that represented success or failure—and the failure seemed to be looming large.

In the evening she heard him return. Her heart stopped as he passed her door and went on up the stairs. Usually he came in to make her a brief visit. She turned away to busy herself with something—anything.

The door opened suddenly and he stood before her—his old, impulsive, boyish self.

"Well, I made fifty dollars today, from art!" he announced.

She thrilled with the words. Then the turn of the tide had come for him perhaps! A small beginning—just the opening—and then—

"I am glad," she said quickly. "An order—"

He shook his head. "No, I got a chance to do some fresco work for a dago ice cream parlor!"

Her castles of art tumbled about her ears. Decorations for a "dago ice cream parlor!" She stared at him with wide eyes. Something in his face held her—something deeply glowing in his eyes. She swayed a bit toward him.

The full, deep voice of the man belied the tenderly smiling boyish eyes. "Yes, fifty dollars—and a good job. Little girl, let's swap dreams. I'll swap my dream of being a Whistler or a Sargent for a home I know of, where skies are blue, mountains green and every man and woman friend. Will you swap your dream for mine and my love, till dreaming is done?"

She felt suddenly weak. The dreariness of the worn, gray studio closed about her; the moving, quiet, manly tones sang in her ears and in her heart. She nodded.

She was swept in his arms and held with a strength that would not be denied.

"That fifty dollars will get us home, dearie. And now I'll propose as a lover should!"

The Island of Guam Has Prohibition as Dry as Dust.

Prohibition of the "bone-dry" variety has become effective in Guam, the governor having, by proclamation, forbidden even the possession of liquor on the island. As a result of the order, which became of force immediately after its issue, nearly $30,000 worth of liquor will leave the island on the first available transportation, the Insular Patrol has been doubled and steps have been taken by the authorities to stamp out all traces of the traffic.

Because the governor's proclamation became immediately effective permission has been granted for the exportation of the large stocks of liquor on hand and some of these will leave the island at once. Some of the liquor will be sent to the East Indies, where it can be sold, while other shipments are to be consigned to Australia for disposal. Mrs. Delgado's stock that has been listed for shipment is valued at $17,938.39, while that of J. K. Shinizu is worth $6,994.81. In addition to these stores a schooner had just arrived in the harbor from Japan with a valuable cargo of liquor, which will at once be transhipped to some "wet" port.

Lieut. C. T. Brooks, M.C., as chief of the Insular Patrol, has doubled the number of his patrolmen, increased the town patrol and scattered more men through the country districts of the island to enforce the new law. Most of these new patrolmen have been drawn from the 41st Company of Marines at Sumay for the special duty of putting the liquor traffic in Guam out of business.

As private distilleries can flourish wherever there are cocoanut trees, and as the sap of the tree will make either an intoxicating drink or native yeast for bread-making purposes, the Insular Patrol probably faces a more difficult situation in Guam than in other territory of the United States where prohibition has become effective.

To meet this situation, however, it has been decided that the distillation of tuba will be strictly forbidden, but that fermented tuba will be permitted for yeast-making purposes. Tuba by natural fermentation will acquire a varying per cent. of alcohol, according to age. A small amount is necessary in the manufacture of yeast. Each native family can use as much of this tuba as is necessary for strictly domestic purposes but it cannot be sold or given away for beverage purposes.

Possession of liquor is made an offence by the proclamation of the governor, and private stocks are subject to confiscation and destruction at the hands of members of the patrol. Already some rather large stores of liquor have been poured out by patrolmen, and it is their purpose to destroy private stores where no attempt is made to export them in accordance with the governor's proclamation.

The United States collier Abarenda will carry some of the banished liquor from Guam to Manila, while other stores will be consigned by way of the schooner now in port. It is expected that after these shipments have been forwarded to "wet" ports only native liquor will be left on the island, and this will be destroyed as rapidly as it is found by the patrolmen scattered through all of the remote districts.—Guam News Letter.

Rheumatism Epidemic.

"Every man called up applied and nearly every reason given that his father had rheumatism," he said. "There was a great epidemic last spring."

"Why do they hold low category men in garrisons" asked a delegate.

"Because if there were no men to command there would be no jobs for officers. That's as good a reason as any," he replied.

Continuing, he said that on the whole the deputation to Ottawa was a success. He said many a man who should have got leave under the order exempting the only sons of widows.

Among the things which the farmers might object to was the stealing of civilian clothes which were never expressed home by the military when they put on the uniform.

"Another thing I wish to protest against is the sending of drafted men, good agricultural men, to Siberia. I can prove that they have been sent."

The Sedition Case.

Mr. Gordon Waldron explained the Cross case, at Brantford. He was charged with uttering words contrary to the law, and calculated to weaken the military effort of Canada. He was fined $500. Mr. Waldron said an application was made to quash the conviction on the ground that it was not to punish Mr. Cross, but the U.F.O. "I hold that, in spite of the opinion of Mr. Justice Meredith. He received punishment on your account, and in order that you might be silent," he said. "If there is spirit of citizenship in you, you must espouse Cross's case. I suggest you make contribution to Cross and manifest your interest in the case."

The whole amount was subscribed.

"There is but one thing you can do to re-establish your liberties. You cannot do anything by legal process, because the Supreme Court decision stands, and speaking as your solicitor, I can advise you to elect a Government which will impeach these judges before the bar of the House, and will dismiss them from office."

Mr. Waldron said that the decision in the Gray case by the full Supreme Court was, in his opinion, arranged, and that the decision was not according to law.

CATTLE MARKET

Union Stock Yards— Receipts 70 cars, with 702 head of cattle, 119 calves, 1,911 hogs, and 1,155 sheep and lambs.

The market for butcher cattle has declined this week 75c. to $1. Baby yearling heifers $2 to $3. This is a condition after a series of heavy runs for the Christmas trade, and buying at high prices. Packers are now fairly well supplied, and trading is more or less of a cleaning up character at the comparatively lower prices.

Lambs are firm, but heavy sheep not wanted.

Hogs steady at this week's decline to $18, fed, and $17.25 f.o.b.

In order to avoid a good deal of misunderstanding of late as to f.o.b. prices, a difference of 25c. is made between the f.o.b. price and the price paid at country points.

The Maid and the Manikin

By BARBARA KERR

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"This is a pretty time of night for two respectable maiden schoolmarms to be prowling around looking for lost keyholes," giggled Bert Wainwright to Louise Laurent, as they were vainly trying to get into their rooming house without waking the other inhabitants. "I never knew that we were hermetically sealed up from the rest of the world, once we were inside this castle. Let's ring the bell."

"Oh, no; this is so funny! Here, we can stand on this stool, reach that roof and walk right along to the verandah."

"And get shot! Well, give me your hand."

And in a minute more of giggling and clambering they both stood on the upper verandah, when just ahead of them a blind ran up and the window opened, but evidently merely for air, as they heard a man's voice humming softly, and the wind blowing aside the curtain they beheld a man at work. Both were rooted to the spot, for it was most unusual work.

Mr. Reginald Santerre was draping a manikin with yellow gauze.

"Oh," breathed Louise. "How adorable!"

"Sh—for the love of Mike!" whispered Bert, as the draper backed gracefully away from his work, walked to the dresser and picked up a photograph. "Me!" again whispered Bert, when the draper leaned the photograph up against the face of the manikin and smilingly eyed it in mental perspective. She tried to keep Louise from seeing. Was he coming to the window? Hastily they turned the corner and climbed hurriedly into their own room.

"Oh! Oh! Oh!" laughed Bert as she rocked back and forth on the floor. "Oh, wasn't that the funniest thing? If you ever tell it, Louise Laurent, I'll murder you! Oh! Oh!"

"Tell it? Of course I won't. But isn't it the sweetest thing you ever saw?"

"What?" demanded Bert. "That dress for me?"

"Bert! That's the dearest dress I ever laid eyes on. I always knew Reggie was a wizard in dry goods. You are the luckiest thing I ever saw! Think of him, working all his evenings designing a dress for you! Aren't you crazy to get into it?"

"No! What do I want with a dress like that? You know—"

"Oh, yes, I know you'd rather get into a corduroy hunting suit and tramp all over the country. But you'll have to quit that and settle down. The wife of Reginald Santerre—"

"Hush, Ouida. Think of a man dressmaker!"

"Shame on you, Bert! Think of Worth."

"Worth-less! Of course, not just that; but have I no ambition but to be a dummy to—hang—things on—a Christmas tree?"

"Now, Bert Wainright, ever since we were in school in No. 6 I've thought sometimes that you were conceited. You ought to be the proudest girl in the world."

But Bert put her hands before her face, and a hard, dry gurgle, much more like a sob than a laugh, escaped her. "Don't talk to me—don't. I'm going to bed."

"Are you crying, Bertie? Are you sick?" came softly out of the darkness.

"No, I was just telling Reggie goodbye. I was giving him to you."

Louise bounded out of bed, turned on the light and got the thermometer. "You are sick, Bert. You've got a fever. Open your mouth."

"Fudge! Take that thing away or I'll bite the end off, and you know what happened to Willy—

"'Twas a chilly day for Willy
When the mercury went down.'

"I'm not sick. You couldn't understand in a hundred years, Louise, but I couldn't any more marry Mr. Santerre—Why was I such a fool as to think I could?"

"You'll be all right in the morning."

"You listen to me."

And then and there Bert unfolded the scheme of presenting her lover to her life-long friend, arranging all the details of the renunciation. Louise listened, at first to humor her, but as she went on planning in the darkness she knew that she meant every word of it. So when morning came she felt a little panicky, but Bert was as cool as though they were swapping sweaters, and things happened just as she had planned. It was Sunday, and they met at the breakfast table. The girls related to Reggie how they had gotten in, and were afraid they might have wakened him, saying nothing of the dress.

"Well, now, isn't that strange? I worked late last night," hesitating a moment. "I had an inspiration for a gown for Miss Wainright."

"Adorable! Lucky Bert! Could we see it?"

"Ripping!" smiled Bert. "And here I am all togged out for a hike. Is it as nice as this?" smoothing out her old brown corduroy.

The faintest frown appeared on Reggie's brow, but the girls hastily arose from the table and all proceeded into his designing room, and the manikin was wheeled into view. Mildly interested, Bert wanted Ouida to try it on, so they took it into their room. Returning soon, Ouida pirouetted before the admiring designer.

She was more than beautiful. The adventure lent an unusual glow to cheek and lip; her black curling hair was loosened up a little, and tiny ringlets framed her face and fell on her white neck.

"Superb! A dream!" murmured the enthralled Reggie, dropping on one knee to fix a place in the hem. There was a knock at the door and Miss Wainright was called out.

"What a wonderful talent, Mr. Santerre. It's an exquisite pleasure to be your manikin. I am really crazy about beautiful clothes," said Ouida, as she admired herself and the gown in the mirror. "And doesn't it make the biggest difference in one? Why, I'm almost good looking!" she observed innocently.

"You are beautiful, Miss Laurent; and so appreciative."

"Oh, Bert is appreciative."

"Oh, Bert is appreciative—indeed she is, but she simply does not care for clothes. Now, I've always liked to try things on. I go to the shops and try on things just to enjoy being fussed over. "I think, Miss Louise, you'll have to keep this, and I will design something else for Miss Wainright—something with—pockets."

Bert pushed the door open, saying rather coldly: "They've called for me. Will you folks mind if I tear myself away?" Then, her eyes falling on the affrighted Louise: "My, but you're a beauty, Ouida. That ought to be yours. Well, so long; sorry I'm so rushed." And she hurried away, leaving the man and the manikin to talk dry goods to their hearts' content.

Bert met an old-time friend and a seasoned hiker, Mary Gregory, at the end of the car line, and they trudged off into the country.

That evening Bert wrote a long, frank, sisterly letter to Mr. Santerre, although she expected to see him at least every day for a few days, explaining in the kindest manner possible that they were unsuited to each other; that she could not think of standing in the way of his ambitions, and persuading him to seek a larger field for his unusual talents. She also told him that she and Mary Gregory were going to France to assist in the work that Mr. Henry Allen was trying to do for the Kansas soldiers, winding up with: "And I'll kiss you good-bye like a little sister if you'll get the suit with the pockets ready before I go."

In the night she was awakened by a little sob.

"Bertie, I feel meaner than dirt! Aren't you a little sorry?"

"Sure thing, Ouida, old pard; but it's only a wrench, and as time goes by we'll all honor me because I had the nerve to do the thing that's going to make us all rise up and call me blessed. Mary and I are going to look for Dick Gregory over there. He likes to hike, and he—likes corduroy. Now, will you cut out the weepy stuff and go to sleep?"

After a man has apologized what does it amount to?

A few hard cases are apt to make a lawyer case hardened.

A SLUGGISH LIVER

CAUSED

SEVERE HEADACHES

The duty of the liver is to prepare and secrete bile and serve as a filter to the blood, cleansing it of all impurities and poisons.

Healthy bile in sufficient quantity is Nature's provision to secure regular action of the bowels, and when the liver is sluggish it is not working properly, and does not manufacture enough bile to thoroughly act on the bowels and carry off the waste products from the system, hence the bowels become clogged up, the bile gets into the blood, constipation sets in, followed by sick and bilious headaches, coated tongue, bad breath, heartburn, water brash, bad taste in the mouth in the morning, jaundice, floating specks before the eyes, etc.

Miss Dian Clark, Myer's Cave, Ont., writes:—"I take pleasure in writing you concerning the good I have received by using Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills for a sluggish liver. When my liver got bad I would have severe headaches, but I got better after I had used a couple of vials of your pills."

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills gently unlock the secretion, clear away all waste and effete matter by acting directly on the liver, and make the bile pass through the bowels instead of allowing it to get into the blood.

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills are 25c. a vial at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

REVERIE.

I should be happy, I suppose.
Perhaps I shouldn't thus complain.
I have as many friends as foes,
As much of gladness as of pain.
My health is good; my appetite
Is great. I can't kick on those scores.
But in the middle of the night
My roommate snores!

That knocks the bliss from my repose.
I wake and shudder at the sound.
I wish his breath came through his nose.
At present he bays like a hound.
I like him, but I'd like to fling
Him, snore and all, clear out of doors,
'Cause when I'm dreaming some swell thing
My roommate snores!

I never heard a noise before
So sudden in its dread effect.
When roused from slumber by that snore
I leave my bed quite unbedecked.
I cross to his and close his face—
Aye, that's the way to stop such roars—
And then it's quiet round the place—
Until he snores!

Women as Brave as the Men

THEIR STRUGGLE SHOWS A REMARKABLE SPIRIT

Talk of the bravery of men, but where can you find a finer spirit than among the half-sick women who are fighting and struggling to do their duty against the terrible odds of ill-health, and who will not give up.

One woman in every three is struggling against weakness. Most of them are not exactly sick, but, oh, how miserable!

The burden of misery of it all has its foundation in the blood which is thin and watery. The red cells are too few. The very stream of life is reduced in vitality. Weakness and inevitable ill-health are the certain result.

Every ailing or weak woman can quickly regain her health in this very simple way. By filling the system with the nutrition that comes from rich red blood, a quick change for the better will result. To accomplish this take two chocolate-coated Ferrozone Tablets after each meal. You'll feel better immediately for the simple rason that Ferrozone renews the blood. It gives you vim, vigor, endurance, restores a tired, worn-out system very quickly.

You'll feel like new all over once you get Ferrozone working through your blood. It puts color into faded cheeks, brightens the eye, quickens the step, brings back that wonderful feeling of youth.

On of the finest things Ferrozone does is to make you eat lots and digest it as well. With keen appetite, sound sleep, strong nerves and lots of nourishing blood you're bound to regain robust health. Any sickly girl or ailing woman that Ferrozone won't make well must be incurable. There is a secret power in Ferrozone and it is worth a trial at all events. Fifty cents per box, six for $2.50. At all dealers in medicine, or by mail from The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

PETERBOROUGH THURSDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1918

Preparations for Labour's Municipal Campaign Were Threshed Out Last Night

Committee's Appointed to Secure Canvassers in Each Ward, to Look After Advertising and Other Details—Labour Halls Will Be Headquarters for Workers—Big Rally on December 30th.

VISIT FROM NEW LEAGUE

The Trades and Labour Council was possessed last night of a single thought, the arrangement of the necessary and interesting details of their campaign for the election of their candidates for municipal service. The "war chest" was filling up satisfactorily, and had already passed the hundred-dollar mark with more to come. The locals reporting last night manifested a spirit of liberality that left little cause for worry on the financial side. The Machinists and Electrical Workers contributed twenty dollars from each union, the Carpenters gave twenty-five dollars, and the Bricklayers added another twenty-five. The Printers reported a grant and a readiness to assume their share of any deficit that might be entailed. To these sums is added the Labour Council's twenty dollars, and other unions are expected to "cash in" at their earliest convenience.

Canvass In Each Ward.

An organization committee was formed with instructions to appoint ward groups of workers, at least four in each ward, who assume the duty of canvassing the ratepayers in behalf of the Labour representatives. An advertising committee was set to work, with instructions to consult with the organization committee, and virtually with power to act. It was proposed that four thousand circular letters be printed and mailed to the electors informing them of the personnel of the Labour ticket and also of Labour's municipal platform.

Labour Halls Open.

It was also decided to throw open the Labour halls free of cost until after election day for the campaign workers, and a public meeting will be held in the main hall on Monday evening, December 30th. It is expected that working men who have motor cars will volunteer their use for getting out the vote. Other details will be handled by the general committee.

Mr. James Garside Endorsed.

Labour's aldermanic list was increased to four last night with the endorsation of Mr. James Garside, who was proposed by the Machinists' Union. It was stated that he had subscribed to the Labour platform, and the Council accepted him as a running mate with Messrs. Alex. Murray, Harry Gainey, and Robert Morrison.

Delegation Received.

Fifteen representatives of the recently organized United City League, headed by its president, Mr. Ryerson Ritchie, waited upon the Labour men, and were cordially welcomed by the chairman, Mr. J. J. Hartley. Mr. Hartley observed that Mr. Ritchie was on old Peterborough boy who had made his mark as a successful organizer of Chambers of Commerce and Boards of Trade in other cities.

"We are here as citizens of Peterborough," Mr. Ritchie said, "not to give you any advice at all, but just to tell you, as citizens speaking to citizens, what we are trying to do to bring about that which there has been so much talk of doing for so many years, that is to get there, with the many things we have been talking about. I have watched Peterborough and its development with a great deal of interest. I received an invitation from the Board of Trade a short time ago to address them, and I told them that their letter was much the kind I had got years ago. I said that the question of Peterborough's development had been discussed enough and that the time had come to get in and act."

FIELD MARSHAL HAIG

Who to-day was given an informal reception in London.

FOOD MUST BE SENT TO GERMANY, SAYS RATHEMAN

Interesting Interview With General Ludendorff—Peace by Understanding.

(Special to the Examiner.)

LONDON, December 19. — General Ludendorff was told more than a year ago that in order to win the war he must capture Paris, London and New York. He admitted that it could not be done.

This was revealed to-day in an interview with Doctor Ratheman, the head of the General Electrical Company, employing 70,000 men, obtained by the Berlin correspondent of the Express.

"Germany is ruined for the next generation, politically, industrially and economically," Ratheman was quoted as saying. "The people do not know who they can trust."

"I told General Lubendorff in July, 1917, that to win the war we have got to capture Paris, London and New York." "We can't do it," he said, and admitted that he wanted a "peace by understanding."

Regarding the present conditions in Germany, Ratheman said, "If the allies do not send food within two months there will be riots and sickness throughout Germany.

Wants to Know If German Ships Will be Destroyed

(Special to The Examiner.)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Senator Lodge to-day demanded that the Secretary of State, now in Paris, inform the Senate whether the peace delegates of the United States are advocating the destruction of all surrendered ships as reported in a Paris cable this morning.

The resolution asking for the information further demands that the Secretary of State, if the report is correct, show "by what authority the delegates to the peace conference are demanding the destruction of the enemy fleet which in part surrendered to the United States."

GENERALS WELCOMED

The Real Celebration for Marshal Haig Will Come Later.

TO-DAY'S EVENTS

Canadian Press:

LONDON, Dec. 19.— London hung out its flags, and the old seaport of Dover flung its gates wide open today to greet Field Marshal Haig and the commanders of five British armies which fought in Belgium and France, Generals Plumer, Rawlinson, Bingwood, Byng and Horne.

It was merely an informal welcome on the part of London, but Dover made of it a great celebration. The real celebration in London comes later in January or February. Field Marshal Haig will then, according to the time-honoured precedent, be raised to a high rank in the peerage, how high is a point for speculation, and given a money premium for his services. This is a procedure which has been followed since the days of Wellington and Nelson down to Kitchener and Roberts, and the occasion will be celebrated with civic and military formalities such as no other nation, except possibly France, can carry off as impressively as Great Britain.

The welcome given the home-coming generals to-day was similar to that given Marshal Foch and Premier Clemenceau of France and Premier Orlando of Italy a little over a week ago, but there was less display. Premier Lloyd George, the Duke of Connaught, members of the Cabinet, generals and lesser functionaries from the War Office made up the receiving party at the Charing Cross station.

After first greetings, civilian officials disappeared from the scene and the small procession proceeded through the principal streets to Buckingham Palace, where King George entertained Field Marshal Haig at luncheon.

Bolshevick Are Gaining Power Throughout Russia

The Situation in Siberia Is Becoming More Unstable—A Veil of Silence.

ALLIED EFFORTS

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Dec. 19.— The Bolshevik are gaining power in Russia, it is learned in independent despatches. This is particularly true in the border States, where the Germans are withdrawing.

As a result of this situation, the Allied policy regarding Russian operations is becoming daily more important. Contrary views are held by the Allied military experts and civilian groups concerning the course the Allies should pursue. They range from the extension of the military effort to crush the Bolshevik to a complete withdrawal from Russia.

The situation in Siberia also is becoming more unstable. As military chiefs succeed each other in chaotic fashion, conditions in Northern Russia are somewhat screened by a veil of silence. The Allie operations there appears to have become practically stabilized.

No Immediate Change.

The one thing that seems certain is that there will be no extension or change in the present policy until the attitude and plans regarding Russia are more fully explained at the peace conference.

Renewed interest in the Russian problem is the outgrowth of persistent rumours that a great Allied expedition is planned for occupying Petrograd and Russia, deposing the Bolshevik government and establishing order during the present winter. The newspapers publish compliments from soldiers, who allege they have been ordered to Russia. The press of all shades of political opinion, hints that great opposition will develop in the event of an attempt being made to carry out such a plan.

Midsummer Examinations

Examinations In Each Case Will be Deferred for Two Weeks.

In view of the unavoidable interruptions to school work which have taken place during the current half year, the holding of the Midsummer examinations will be deferred in each case for a fortnight in accordance with the following scheme:—

Junior High School Entrance—July 2nd.

Initial Dates for 1919 Examinations.

Junior Public School Graduation, June 30th.

Lower School, July 2nd.

Middle School, July 11th.

Pass Matriculation, July 2nd.

Upper School and Honour Matriculation, June 30th.

With the foregoing provisions and those made in the Regulations for the conduct of these examinations, the ill effects upon the school work of the aforesaid interruptions may be reasonably well overcome. And, further, as Easter next year will be nearly three weeks later than in 1918, it is unnecessary to amend the Farm Regulations which were issued last September, except to provide that the teachers' examination may be deferred until the week following the Easter holidays.

CITY WANTS TO SELL BUCKWHEAT COAL

Meeting of the Fuel Commissioners Held Last Evening.

Last evening the Fuel Commissioners decided that six tons of coal, except buckwheat coal, which can be purchased in any quantity, may now be purchased by any citizen. Numerous requests from the rural sections for a small quantity of coal were received and granted.

The following resolutions were passed:

'It was resolved that coal dealers be notified that any person be allowed to purchase coal in any quantity so long as they shall have not more than six tons of coal on hand at one time. This provision does not include buckwheat coal, the purchase of which is not restricted.

'It was resolved that in consideration of the fact that there are no restrictions on the purchase of buckwheat coal, and considering that there is a large quantity of this coal in the city, this Board urges the citizens to purchase one or two tons of buckwheat coal for use with other coal.'

Soldiers' Council Will Retain Administration of Military Affairs In Germany.

SERIOUS DISORDERS

(United Press.)

(Frank J. Taylor.)

BERLIN, December 19. — The Ebert-Hasse coalition government has received the endorsement of the National Soldatenrate (soldiers council). The vote was unanimous. The Soldatenrate accorded the present government absolute control over civilian affairs but reserved the deposition of the army.

A resolution adopted by the Soldatenrate, makes the Peoples' Council, composed of six members, supreme in the National Provisional Government. The administration of military affairs by the Peoples' Council, however, will be subject to the approval by a parliamentary legislative committee, elected by the Soldatenrate.

TORONTO POLICE STRIKE SETTLED

Attorney-General Will Be Asked for a Decision.

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Dec. 19. — The police strike was settled to-day. An understanding has been arranged whereby the policemen's commissioners will reinstate the discharged constables, and the question of the right of police constables to affiliate with a Union will be referred to the Attorney-General of Ontario for a decision.

The Police Commission agree to the constables forming an inside union not identified with the Trades and Labour Council.

MEETING THIS AFTERNOON.

If the police who are on strike here will return to duty immediately, officials of their Union, who were summarily dismissed on Tuesday, will be reinstated. This decision was arrived at by the Board of Police Commissioners this afternoon, after many conferences. Questions of recognition by the Commissioners of the charter granted to the Police Union by the Trades and Labour Council should be left to the decision of the Attorney-General of Ontario, in the opinion of the Commissioners. This offer of the Commissioners for the settlement of the strike will be discussed at a mass meeting this afternoon.

London Will Give Woodrow a Real Welcome

By Lowell Mellett.

(United Press.)

LONDON, Dec. 19.—London intends to eclipse the hearty welcome to President Wilson in the same degree that its population exceeds that of the French capital.

While great numbers of organizations, political and non-political, have already considered separate demonstrations in Wilson's honour, it is believed they ultimately will follow the example provided by Paris and combine in one big celebration.

The Government, of course, will provide the President with every official attention, but it is London's millions who will furnish the real welcome.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

THURSDAY, DEC. 19TH, 1918.

A SPLENDID WORK.

In the midst of the evident effort on the part of the people of Peterborough to plan for an improved and more progressive city, as is evidenced by the interest in the coming municipal elections, our citizens should not lose sight of an organization that quietly and unostentatiously, but none the less effectively, has been playing a very important part in making Peterborough a better place in which to live. Since its inception the Peterborough Health Association has done a wonderful work in th community—a work that has not been fully appreciated by the citizens except those who have come closely in contact with what has been accomplished. The coming of peace will make it possible, it is hoped, to extend the scope of this work, but the support of the people of Peterborough will be necessary to make this possible, and on this account the social evening under the auspices of the Nurses' Supervision Committee, which is to be held a week from tomorrow night in the Empress Hotel and the proceeds of which will be used in the purchase of nourishment for invalids, is an event of unusual importance. It is to be sincerely hoped that the attendance will be as large as possible.

A CALL TO SERVICE.

In endeavouring to see that Peterborough is governed by the best aldermanic board that can possibly be secured for next year, The Examiner has no axe to grind—the articles that have been published during the past few weeks have been written in an effort to impress upon the people of Peterborough the facts that the election of a city council is a serious matter, and that in view of the tasks that lie before us the question cannot be treated with the careless indifference that has characterized other municipal elections. That the citizens are beginning to realize these things and that the realization is likely to be followed by action is a matter upon which the people as a whole are to be congratulated. Never in Peterborough's history was there more need of interest in the selection of the city's managing board—and never was the call to the best ability of Peterborough to come forward to serve the community more insistent. To the men to whom the call has come, The Examiner would say that their services are needed and that they should disregard the sacrifices that election to office would entail and forgetting the inconvenience it may cause to themselves, accept the invitation of their fellow citizens. It is a great opportunity to be of service—it is to be hoped that no personal consideration will keep the right type of men out of the field.

OUR RETURNING SOLDIERS.

From the present time until the last Peterborough man is home from overseas, the people of this city will have to deal with the problem of how to handle the reception of the boys as they come back. The matter is complicated by the uncertainty as to just when a particular party of returned men is to arrive and as to the names and addresses of those who are coming back. It is the desire of every citizen to give the returned men a welcome that will convince them that the people of Peterborough are proud of what they have done overseas and rejoice that they have been spared to return. How this can best be done is a problem of which the details should be worked out as soon as possible and a uniform plan adopted so that one party of returned men will not be received with bands and cheering and the next allowed to drop into town with no one to meet them but the hotel porters and taxi-cab drivers.

The wish of every returned soldier is to get home as soon as possible. That should be the main idea back of these receptions. Anything that prevents the speedy re-union of a soldier and his family will not be appreciated, so that there should be no policy adopted of holding a procession and pelting the returned men with addresses of welcome. If provision can be made to have sufficient motor cars at the station to transport, not only the returning soldier, but his immediate relatives who are on hand to welcome him, to his home immediately, the man from overseas will be satisfied.

An effort, however, should be made to have a band at the station. A welcome, no matter how big the crowd may be, falls flat if there is no music, and there is no reason why it could not be possible to welcome all our returning soldiers with a band. We have three bands in the city and they should get together themselves, or be called together by the city authorities and divide the work up among them. The members of the 57th, G.W.V.A. and Salvation Army bands will surely be delighted to do their part in receiving those who are coming back from the battle line, and if they cooperate in dealing with the matter, there will be no difficulty.

THE BOCHE IS ALWAYS A BOCHE.

Shall we ever understand the Germans? Do they understand themselves? These are questions that irresistibly occur to one on reading recent news from across the Rhine as well as from that side of it now in occupation by the allied troops. The army returns defeated "but triumphant," the troops are hailed as conquering heroes! The revolution is one of the most obvious shams ever perpetrated in the name of liberty, and New Year fetes are announced to be held all over Germany to celebrate it. The Kaiser has abdicated and the Crown Prince has renounced succession, and it is announced that the salaries and allowances of the royal family were paid as usual a few days ago.

Does not all this show clearly that Prussia and the other states of Germany are united in playing a very obvious game in order, if possible, to beguile and circumvent the allied governments at the peace table?

Germany is accepting the presence of the allied armies with almost suspicious alacrity and complaisance. Only now and then do we hear of manifestations of ill will. At this fact there is no reason to complain, but it is an attitude impossible with any other people and suggests that orders have been issued and are being obeyed by the Germans with the same precision and exactitude which prevailed under the regime which, it is pretended, has been superseded. The Germans are essentially a servile people, and it will take them generations to rise to the stature and dimensions of a nation of free men.

If one thing is plain, it is that they are entirely unashamed of and therefore unrepentant with respect to their country's share in the war, nor do they recognize the hideous criminality involved in the responsibility of causing it and the methods with which it was carried on both on land and sea. Until the Germans show some measure of shame and repentance they as a people must be dealt with as the criminals they have proved themselves to be. The situation is one which leaves no room for maudlin sentimentality toward criminals.—New York Herald.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The first Canadian division' were the first Canadian troops to cross the Rhine, forming part of the Allied advance guard. This is an honour that the good old First has richly earned.

The United Farmers are going to place candidates in every riding in which an election is held. This is not pleasant reading for either the Hearst or Borden governments.

Preparations for Labour's Municipal Campaign Made

election and its particular significance at this period in the city's history. The aims of the United City League were to enlist the co-operation of every citizen in a movement to see that the very best men were elected to safeguard all the interests of Peterborough.

"We are here to ask you to come in and help us and we will help you, and when I say the best men for the Council I don't mean those who have the most money, or those who have industrial attachments. Our desire is to realize now some of the ideals we have been living for. We feel that if we can all get together we may be able to realize some of the things we have been talking of."

Mr. Ritchie spoke of the old custom by which candidates thrust themselves and then come along with a glad hand and ask the ratepayers for their votes. "It seems to me that the time has come to stop that. We don't want men with pet hobbies and special interests, but we want men who will go into the Council to serve the whole city. That is the message we bring to you to-night."

Mr. Richard Sheehy.

Mr. Sheehy, who is vice-president of the League, recalled his union days 35 years ago. He was a labour man and still regarded himself as one. He stated that the Bricklayers' Union was the first to bring down the working day from ten to nine hours, and in that movement he and Mr. Hartley had taken an active part. Speaking of the aims of the United City League he said that the best men that could be chosen for the Council were the best for the entire city. There were a lot of problems facing the Council, and the best men that could be brought out were needed. "We are here to co-operate with the Labour Council to get the best men to stand for the coming elections. Our interests are all the same, and there are many important questions that must be dealt with."

Mr. T. H. G. Denne.

Mr. Denne stated that Mr. Hartley had been appointed a member of the executive of the League. "We would like you to appoint some other member to join us. We want every citizen eventually. There are no dues. It is a volunteer association and we are anxious to give our time to advance the interests of Peterborough."

Speaking again Mr. Ritchie emphasized the fact that the League was recruiting for volunteer citizens, men who were willing to help in the work of electing capable representatives in the Council. He expressed the hope that the Labour men would give their assistance.

Motion of Appreciation.

When the deputation had retired a resolution of appreciation was passed acknowledging the recognition of Labour as expressed by the visit, and presently the Council returned to the brass tacks of preparing for the election of their own "big four."

The unique incident was interpreted as a sign of a new found feeling that capital and labour should get closer together, that the time was coming when friction must cease to exist. That condition would be reached, one member stated, when Labour realized that it was getting a square deal.

A Divisive Manoeuvre.

Another speaker said that the motive of the visit was to split the labour movement in the approaching elections. "Had they recognized the fact that we have already selected four candidates," remarked the Dean of the machinists, "had they said that they appreciated our action, that they recognized that it was justified, I would say that they came looking for harmony. But they ignored our men, and evidently want to select the whole Council. There was just as great a need of good aldermen a year ago as there is now, but they did not organize then. They knew that the candidates were all members of their class, and that there was no necessity of trying to create a division."

Said another member—"If we elect our four we are quite willing that they have the others.

And again—"If this movement is voluntary, let's all volunteer, see what they do, and take a hand in it."

"They asked us to help them select good men for the Council," commented another member. "We've got four good men already selected."

Ready to Co-operate, But—

On one point the Trades Council was in full accord with the United City League, they expressed their desire to help make Peterborough a bigger and better city, and there was a full measure of appreciation of the visit with its solicitation for assistance, but— well the meeting was finally closed without the appointment of a representative to the League's executive.

One member who delights in the Socratic method, lamented the fact that amenities of formal intercourse had deprived him of the opportunity of putting some pointed questions to the visitors. Some one then interposed that the Council get down again to the business of completing the details of practical electioneering

PETERBORO MEN ARE IMPLICATED.

Big Shipment of Wet Goods Seized by the Provincial Officer.

Inspector F. B. Tabor of the Brockville district and Provincial officer Sykes, made a big haul of liquor on the Friday night C. P. R. train from Montreal. The officers had reason to suspect that a good deal of liquor was being carried from Montreal into different places in Ontario, and decided to make an investigation. They wet to Montreal on Friday and on the night train they "spotted" seven men whom they thought were carrying liquor. On searching their luggage they found 113 big bottles of whiskey and a two gallon jug. They went to Montreal Friday and have had the men arrested here if they could have got word through to Chief Phillips. They telegraphed him to be at the depot, but he did not get the message, and so the men's names were taken, and they were allowed to go on. They were from Havelock, Peterboro and Toronto, and all have been summoned to appear here on Wednesday, Dec. 18th.—Rideau Record, Smith's Falls.

Influenza Was Five Times Deadlier Than the War

Six Million Persons Perished From Influenza-Pneumonia During the Past Twelve Weeks—Worst Epidemic Since the Black Death.

(Special to Examiner.)

(Canadian Press via Reuters.)

LONDON, December 19th. — The Times medical correspondent says that it seems reasonable to believe that about six million persons perished from influenza-pneumonia during the past twelve weeks. It has been estimated that the war caused the death of twenty million persons in four and a half years. Thus, the correspondent points out, influenza has proved itself five times deadlier than war, because in the same period at its epidemic rate, influenza would have killed 100,000,000.

Never since the Black Death has such a plague swept over the world. The need of a new survey of public health measures has never been more forcibly illustrated.

Delegate From British Seamen Is Here To-night

The visit of Councillor Peter Wright of the British Seamen's Union was arranged on such short notice that there has been only a few days available to advertise his lecture He will speak at the Collegiate Institute Hall tonight beginning at 8 o'clock and will explain the purpose and give some of the reasons for the Seamen's boycott against all things German. One phase of his address giving the reasons why the British sailors object to German sailors will doubtless recall some of the Hun's ruthless methods against British sailors during the war, and should bring a direct message from the Seamen's Union to the citizens of Peterboro Advertisements of his address in Massey Hall, Toronto, contained the following reference to the man who will be heard at the Collegiate tonight. "Councillor Peter Wright of London, England, apostle of the German boycott, disciple of Havelock Wilson, and Trustee of the Seaman's and Firemen's Union of Great Britain, has been the greatest thorne in the flesh to German propaganda. His implacable denunciation of Germany for her unbelieveable atrocities has made him a marked man by Bolsheviki and German agents."

Councillor Wright will tell of the British Seamen's decision to take the law into their own hands and boycott the Germans on every sea until reparation is secured.

Vital Statistics to be Revised

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Dec. 19.—The question of bringing about uniformity in the compilation of vital statistics throughout the Dominion has been the subject of a conference at Ottawa during the present week. It is proposed that the Provincial government enact a model of the collection of such statistics and the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia have already undertaken to have a measure brought down at their coming legislative session.

It is proposed that the provinces, when they have compiled their lists, shall send copies to the Central Bureau of Statistics at Ottawa.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y., Dec. 14. — Virtually all of the 23,000 employees of the General Electric Company's big manufacturing plant here walked out to-day in sympathy with the striking co-workers in the company's plant at Erie, Pa. Employees marched in an orderly manner to the centre of the city, where they held an important mass meeting. Organization leaders requested them to prepare for a long struggle.

OSHAWA WANTS HARBOUR BUILT

Delegation Visited Ottawa This Morning and Waited on Carvel.

(Special to The Examiner.)

OTTAWA, Dec. 19.—A deputation from Oshawa headed by the Mayor, waited upon Hon. F. B. Carvel, Minister of Public Works and urged upon him the desirability of a harbour in the district. In 1913 there was an item of $100,000 in the estimates for such a purpose, but the coming of war caused it to be eliminated. Oshawa wants it put back again and desires that work on the harbour be undertaken at once.

VICTORY BAZAAR

The Victory Bazaar, held at the Young Women's Christian Association on Tuesday afternoon and evening was an unqualified success, both from a financial viewpoint and as a social event. Much interest was shown by the members and friends of the Association, who were generous in their donations for the sale, and who thronged the rooms on the day of the bazaar. Practically all the articles were sold before the evening was over, and the net amount realized is well over two hundred dollars. An added interest was given to the affair by the very pretty and appropriate decorations of the booths, and a splendid programme of folk dances and musical selections, while in the green room, beautifully decorated in Japanese style, the young ladies of the Girls' Auxiliary served tea. Great credit is due to Miss Caroline Littlefield, who organized the bazaar, and whose enthusiasm and energy are to a great measure responsible for its success. The thanks of the Association are due to the management of the various stores who sent in generous donations to the sale, to those who assisted on the programme, and to the J. M. Greene Music Company and the Cressman Company for the use of the Edison and Victor machines.

Bolshevik Are Gaining

erwise hampering winning of the war by the Allied nations.

Approve Policy.

The morning newspapers approve the policy of Lord Milner, War Secretary, not to abandon Russia, but to withdraw the military forces as soon as possible, some of them, however, ask the Government to define clearly its plan of campaign.

The Daily News calls upon the Government to "Make evident that we are not pursuing illegitimate ends, nor impotently waiting for something to turn up."

"We are at war with Russia and the nation is entitled to know what end the Government contemplates," says the Daily Telegraph.

"The Daily Mail believes that world peace is impossible so long as the Bolsheviks threaten Finland and Esthonia, and provide Germany with an excuse to defer demobilization, thus forcing the Allies to keep up their huge armies and navies."

"We do not presume to say what sort of government shall prevail in Russia, but we must have a guarantee that it will be free from Germany and that our loyal Russian friends who fought by our side will be safe," says the Times. "It is no use to pretend to settle world peace if Russia is left a running sore."

MILITARY HONOURS PAID

Impressive Double Funeral in Peterboro This Afternoon.

Impressive indeed was the funeral cortege that passed down George street this afternoon when, under the auspices of the Peterborough branch of the Great War Veterans' Association, the last military honours were paid to two of Peterborough's soldiers, Cadet Sidney McIntyre of the Royal Air Force, and Bandsman Stocker, member of the Great War Veterans' band. The funeral procession was headed by a firing squad, followed by the Veterans' Band, with whom were a number of the 57th Regiment band, of which Bandsman Stocker has also been a member. The two hearses containing the flag-draped caskets of the dead soldiers, and flanked by pall bearers selected from among the members of the Great War Veterans, came next, side by side, while an escort of Veterans, headed by President Staunton of the G. W. V. A., the mourners and a number of citizens in carriages, followed. The usual impressive ceremony took place at the Little Lake cemetery.

Voice of The People

Peterborough, Dec. 19th. 1918

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—In Wednesday evening's Review, under the title of "When the City Council Slept," the statement is made that the City is stuck for part of the judgment of the Crown Attorney, obtained against the County. The Review further says that another suite of offices must be furnished which will add to the City's share of the expenses of the administration of justice, and the question is asked by the Review, if the Aldermen did not fall asleep at the switch, and permit the case to go by default so far as the City was concerned.

In answer to that I wish to say that the City was not a party to the action, and was not entitled to appear The Statute provides that the county must furnish proper and sufficient offices for the Crown Attorney. The City is not called upon to do this and the City was not represented in the action because it was not party to the proceedings and had no right to appear.

The City of Peterborough each three or five years has an arbitration with the County to fix the City's share of the cost of the administration of justice in the City and County The City's share has been ascertained and fixed at the arbitration in which Mr. W. H. Moore, K. C., was the City's arbitrator, so it is a matter of no concern to the City how many law suits it has with the Crown Attorney or any one else, as the City is not called upon to pay any share of the verdicts. When the time comes for the next award to be made, the arbitrators will then consider what the actual cost of the administration of justice is coming from the City and from the County, and upon that will be fixed the City's proportion of payment to the County and this present verdict against the County will not be charged up as a part of the City's share of the administration of justice in the future.

The City, of course, will be called upon to pay its proportionate share for the keeping up of the offices of the Crown Attorney as well as maintaining of the other offices for other officials appointed for the administration of justice.

I am sure that the Review did not have these facts before it when the editorial, "When the City Council Slept," was written and if it had had these facts, no doubt the City Council would not have been put in the light that this editorial may place it in, under the circumstances.

I remain,

Yours truly,

G. N. GORDON.

BIG SUM INVOLVED IN JUDGE HUYCKE'S APPEAL DECISION

In a judgment announced today Judge Huycke dismissed the appeal of the Quaker Oats company against the Court of Revision's confirmation of the assessment for school taxes that was applied by Mr. W. J. Henry, the city's assessor, for the first time this year. This assessment and tax is entirely separate from the company's fixed assessment upon which the municipal rate has been paid.

Following the instructions of the Assessment act, and a recent precedent established in the courts, the assessor this year included in the Quaker Oats company's assessment $1,470,450, comprising assessments on land and buildings, upon which the school rate only should be levied When asked by the Finance Committee for an explanation of this action, Mr. Henry replied that under the act exemption from school taxes was forbidden and he had simply considered it his duty to include this assessment now, particularly in view of the fact that precedents had clearly established the right and duty of a municipality to levy school taxes on such assessments.

Some members of the Council contended that the city had made an agreement with the Quaker Oats Company when they located here in 1891, and that they were in honour bound to maintain it for the whole period of forty-two years. It was proposed after the Court of Revision had approved the assessment and an appeal was made to the County Judge by the Company, that the Council instruct City Solicitor Gordon not to appear at the hearing. Alderman Edgar insisted that a test case should be made of this assessment, and the Council finally decided, not unanimously, to let the case take its course.

Some members of the Council declared their opinion that by this action they were breaking faith with the company, but the majority contended that if the assessment was demanded by the law and therefore that the exemption from school taxes was not sanctioned, that the appeal should be opposed by the city through Mr. Gordon. The appeal was argued by Mr. E. A. Peck for the Quaker Oats Company and Mr. G. N. Gordon for the city.

Judge Huycke's decision follows:

Appeal by the company against assessment for school taxes only. The assessment was confirmed by the Court of Revision of the city and the appeal is from that decision.

I fail to distinguish this case from the following:

Pringe vs. Stratford, 29 Q.L.R. 246.

Ontario Power Co. vs. Stratford, 3 Q.L.R. 378.

Niagara Power Co. vs. Stamford, 3 Q.L.R. 384.

The three Stratford cases, 50 C.S.R. 168.

Ontario Power Co. vs. Stamford, A. C. Vol. 1, 1916, 529.

My conclusion is that I am bound absolutely by these cases and must follow them. The result is that the present appeal must be dismissed.

Means Large Sum.

At the City Hall to-day it was stated that for the remaining years of the agreement with the company the total taxes for school purposes would amount to something less than $400,000. The yearly tax will depend upon the school rate and the assessment. This year's assessment for school purposes is $1,470,450, and the rate is eleven mills, providing about $16,000.

Peter Gettas Won Electric Lamp

Last night at the Water street Alleys the Blind Score in Five Pins was run off and Mr. Pete Gettas was the lucky winner. After the first round there was three tie with 142 and in the roll off Pete had his glimmers on the lamp and when the smoke cleared Pete was holding the prize by the score of 144. There was some very close scoring. Mr. Walton had the correct score, but in the last frame fell down. Mr. Downer and Mr. J. Getttas were the runners up, and both fought hard for the lamp.

Music & Drama

THE VERY IDEA.

"The Very Idea," a farce that, like "Twin Beds" and "Fair and Warmer," skated on thin ice all through the evening, and that came closer to breaking through than the others named, was the attraction at the Grand last night, and proved a bright, well-acted and amusing offering, albeit a little Gallic in flavour. The subject of eugenics treated through the medium of a farce is not of a nature that mixed audiences in a provincial town are accustomed to hear discussed and probably the offering was not as much enjoyed on that account as the brightness of its lines and the capable way in which it was presented, warranted. Ralph Bunker supplied the principal comedy, giving a very clever performance, while he was well supported by an adequate company.

Will Investigate Causes of Slow Answer to Alarm

Alleged That Inspector Gave Signal Three Times at Sarnia.

SARNIA, Dec. 19. — Sarnia's fire fighting force is to be investigated as a result of the recent inspection by the underwriters. Members of the city council, and especially His Worship Mayor Crawford, stated that they were considerably annoyed at the showing made by the fire department when the best results were looked for. It is alleged that when the inspector arrived in town he 'phoned the Mayor and other city officials to watch the inspection.

The alarm box at the Vendome Hotel corner was pulled three times, but with no response. The telephone was then used, and although presumably at the fire hall, still the firefighters did not appear, it is alleged. Shortly after the fire hall called the Vendome Hotel and asked if anything was wanted. Then, it is alleged, the fire department turned out with broken harness and the test was at last made. The Mayor stated that the fire department had failed in its duty, and a thorough investigation will be made.

Complete Text of Judgment in the Case of Hatton Versus the County of Peterboro

Following is a copy of the judgment in the case of Hatton versus the County of Peterboro. In this action Mr. G. W. Hatton, Crown Attorney brought suit against the County Council for the defendants alleged failure to supply with adequate office accomodation in the County Buildings also to recover certain office expenses said to have been incurred in connection with his duties as Crown Attorney. The judgment in full as handed down by Mr. Justice Latchford follows:—

Copy of judgment of Latchford, Jr. delivered Dec. 13th, 1918. O'Connel for plaintiff.

E. D. Armour, K.C., and F. D. Kerr for defendant.

Peterboro, Oct. 22nd, 1918.

The plaintiff has held the offices of County Crown Attorney and Clerk of the Peace for the County of Peterboro since Oct. 16th, 1914 and is an officer connected with the Provincial Courts of Justice within this meaning of section 377 of the Municipal Act.

That section imperatively casts upon the defendants the obligation of providing such an officer with "proper offices," together with fuel, light stationary and furniture."

The plaintiff alleges that the defendants have failed in the performance of the statutory duty towards him, and that he has in consequence been put to expense for which he claims to be reimbursed. He also asks for a mandatory order directing the defendants to provide him with proper offices, fuel, light, stationery and furniture.

The defendants say that they have fulfilled their statutory obligations and that if there was any failure on their part to provide proper offices, &c., the plaintiff made use of such accomodation as the defendants provided and accepted the same as suitable and sufficient and by his acquiescence is stopped from maintaining this action.

The plaintiff's predecessors in the office of County Crown Attorney and Clerk of the Peace has been content with the use up to 1912 of one room on the ground floor of the Court House in which there was a small vault. Like the plaintiff, they were engaged in general practice, and their law offices in the business centre of the city were used, as the plaintiff has used his law offices there, for the transaction of public as well as private affairs. The Court House is not centrally situated, and the occupation of quarters there would no doubt have diminished the income derived from ordinary practice. It is probably for this reason that they were content with limited accommodation provided for them by the defendants. Little as that always was, it was still further diminished in 1912 when the room occasionally used by the County Crown Attorney was made an annex to the library of the County Law Association.

When Mr. Hatton was appointed, nothing but a small vault, proper only for the storage of documents, was at the disposal of the defendants for his accommodation. Of this the plaintiff made some little use, but at no time did he regard it as sufficient compliance with the statute. He, in fact, protested to the Reeve and other members of the defendant's council that proper accommodation was not afforded him and in March 1916 addressed a letter to the Clerk of the Municipality enclosing a statement of expenses incurred by reason of the failure of the defendants to perform the duty cast upon them by the statute and requesting that he be furnished with proper offices, and that he be reimbursed for such expenses.

It is plain, I think, that what the plaintiff really desired was not offices in the Court House, but an allowance towards maintaining his offices down town. Beyond offering to provide Mr. Hatton with an upstairs room, which did not contain a vault and was in other respects unsuitable the defendants did nothing, though an opportunity was afforded for providing proper offices when, after the 1st of December, 1916, the Court House was remodelled and extended.

I find that the defendants have not at any time provided the plaintiff as an officer connected with the Provincial Courts of Justice with proper offices.

The plaintiff is in my opinion entitled to be reimbursed for the expenses he has been put to owing to the remissness of the defendants. Lees V County of Carleton (1873) 33 U.C. 409.

It is, I think impossible to ascertain upon the evidence before me the precise amount for which the defendants are liable.

Prior to March 10th, 1916, the defendants had no proper notice that the plaintiff was not satisfied, as his predecessor had been, to use in connection with his official position his chambers in the central section of the city, and the room and vault, or vault alone, provided in the Court House. Even after that date the defendants cannot, in my opinion, be held liable for more than a part of the plaintiff's office expenses. That part I estimate—siting as a jury—at $200 per year, which for the period from March 10th, 1916, to the date of issue of the writ, July 12th, 1918, amounts to $466.66. The plaintiff is entitled to be paid in addition $64 expended by him for furniture which it was the duty of the defendants to supply, or, in all, the sum of $530.66.

As the typewriter was not certified by the Attorney General to be necessary, sec. 377 (1) the defendants are not liable for its cost.

As to the application for a mandamus. I find that there has been a demand by the plaintiff for the performance by the defendants of their duty to provide him with proper offices &c., and a neglect and refusal to comply with that demand.

The right to compel by mandamus the performance of a public duty in which the plaintiff is personally interested is not, I think, open to question; Toronto Public Board V Toronto (1900) 19 P.R. 329.

I am, therefore of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled in addition to the damages stated to the mandatory order requiring the defendants to provide him with proper offices.

I think no such order can properly be made as to fuel, light, stationery and furniture. If they are provided the plaintiff will have an appropriate remedy in an action for damages.

There will be judgment accordingly with costs; stay of ten days.

MAY ALLISON
"THE RETURN OF MARY"
A WINSOME LOVE STORY

Beautiful May Allison Makes Big Hit in New Play at the Grand theatre

"The Return of Mary," with charming May Allison as the star will be the attraction at the Grand theatre to-morrow for a two day engagement and is a five reel romantic drama of sparkling humor and delightful original situations.

Miss Allison is seen as a young girl who was supposed to have been kidnapped while an infant and then retured to her family at the age of seventeen—the fact that she is not the lost child develops later in the play and leads to all manner of complications which give Miss Allison unusual opportunity for her vesatile talents. She is supported by a cast of notables headed by Darrell Foss, who plays the part of Jack Denby. Others of the company are Clarence Burton Claire McDowell, Frank Brownlee and Joseph Belmont—all players of the highest attainment, who are well known in Metro productions.

The picture was adapted for the screen by George D. Baker from the play by Hale Hamilton and was directed by Wilfred Lucas. The part of Mary is particularly suited to May Allison who plays it in a vivacious and altogether winsome manner.

Canada Seems to Have Made Bad Ship Deal

Government is Pledged to Enormous Price for Five Years.

HANDICAP TO COUNTRY

OTTAWA, Dec. 18.—The Government is commencing to feel some alarm regarding its $24,000,000 contract with the Dominion Steel Company of Sydney, N.S., entered into shortly before the war ended. This contract provides for the manufacture of rolled plates for shipbuilding. The deliveries of these will not start until next July, and the contract continues for several years thereafter.

Apart entirely from the fact that the Government did not embark on the highly-important industry of shipbuilding until the war was four years old and near its end, it is a somewhat startling fact that the Government entered into a contract at war prices for the delivery of rolled plates, which does not commence until the war is seven months over, and which does not finish until peace has been established and prices have resumed normal or even sub-normal.

Prices Are Abnormal

Worse than that the prices given to the company are abnormal, even for war times. The company gets $83 a ton for the plates based on a price of $25 a ton for the ingot, and for every dollar the ingot drops, a dollar shall be deducted from the price paid for the plates. It is not a percentage decrease. So that should the price of the ingot go to nothing, the Government still would be compelled to pay $58 a ton for the plates, and the period for the contract is five years.

U.S. Makes Better Deal

This is bad enough but at the time the Government of Canada undertook to pay $83 a ton for plate to be delivered from next July, the United States Government had fixed a price of $67.50 for the same plates, and now it is announced that the general committee of the American Iron and Steel Institute of the United States has, after a conference with the war industries board, secured a declaration from the steel manufacturers to the effect that they are in favor of a reduction in the price of steel, starting Jan. 1st. In fact, the Wall Street Journel has predicted that the reduction will be in the neighborhood of $5.20 a ton.

$21 Below Canada's Deal

This will bring the price of plate down to $62, as against $83 agreed to in the five-year contract of the Dominion Government. In the best days of the bonus system there was never, surely a bonus such as this.

At such prices, how, it may be asked, can Canadian shipbuilders hope to compete with those of the United States? It would appear that shipbuilding in Canada, delayed so unpardonably long, is for the next five years to be hopelessly handicapped through the contract entered into by the Government with the Dominion Steel Company of Sydney for rolled plates.

CLOTHING AWAITS BELGIANS.

25,000,000 Garments at Newark Ready to be Sent Abroad.

WASHINGTON, December 19. — Announcement is made that about 25,000,000 articles of used clothing were contributed through the Red Cross in response to the appeal from the Commission for Relief in Belgium. Collected in September, this clothing is now being assembled at Newark for shipment. The number of the articles is an estimate, but the weight of the clothing is 20,000,000 pounds.

The commission asked for 5,000 tons; the total collected was 10,000 tons, nearly every district doubling its quota. Clothing, cloth and wearing apparel of all sorts is still pouring in at Newark. Three large warehouses are full to the roof. The Orange Riding Academy is piled forty feet high with clothing, and 250 cars are waiting to be unloaded.

Among the gifts was one of thousands of American uniforms of the civil war period, given by Bannerman of New York, dealer in army and navy outfits. Some of these uniforms of army broadcloth, when recut, will make very serviceable clothing.

COBOURG PHYSICIAN IN POLICE COURT.

In Police Court at Cobourg last week, before P. M. Floyd, a Cobourg physician was charged by License Inspector Goodrich with issuing a prescription to John J. Armstrong for sixteen ounces of whiskey, contrary to Section 59 of the Ontario Temperance Act. The liquor, Armstrong testified, he had secured for his brother-in-law, who had had a bad fall and needed it for internal purposes. A. J. Armstrong, counsel for the defence, claimed that the doctor had not contravened the Act in prescribing the sixteen ounces, stating the onus, if any, was on the druggist in filling a prescription for more than six ounces, and that in making the order for sixteen ounces the order was null and void.

A fine of fifty dollars and costs was imposed on the doctor and this is his second offence.

Farmers Demand Free Trade With America

Endorse Winnipeg Platform Clause on Free Trade With Britain —Complete Reciprocity.

THE SENATE

(Special to The Examiner.)

TORONTO, Dec. 20.—A unanimous resolution of fraternal greetings from the United Farmers of Ontario to the representatives of organized labour in Ontario and the members of trade unions in the province, was passed by the convention in session at the Labour Temple to-day.

The opening business of the convention to-day was the election of officers other than the president and vice-president already elected by acclamation. Mr. J. J. Morrison was unanimously re-elected to the position of secretary and treasurer. The convention then went into closed session to discuss the affairs of the farmers co-operative and propaganda proposals for the extension of the influence of the U.F.O. among the farmers of the province.

Free Trade.

Reciprocal free trade with the United States in everything from A to Z is the demand of the United Farmers of Ontario. They will not be satisfied now with the reciprocity agreement of 1911, which affected natural products only, but want the tariff bars swept away on manufactured articles as well, if the United States will do the same. Amid tremendous cheering they passed a resolution to that effect at their convention in the Labour Temple. And free trade with the United States is to be one of the biggest planks in the Ontario farmers' platform. No longer will the organized farmers of this Province be accused of being behind their Western brethren. They went the farmers of the West one better Thursday. The Winnipeg platform, which was recommended for their approval, simply provided "that the reciprocity agreement of 1911, which still remains on the statute books of the United States, be accepted by the Parliament of Canada." On motion of Mr. F. C. Drury of Barrie, Ont., seconded by Mr. W. C. Good of Brantford, Ont., this was amended by the following addition: "And that any further reduction of tariff on the part of the United States toward Canada be met by similar reductions by Canada towards the United States."

Speaking to his amendment, Mr. Drury said: "If we had to choose between free trade with Britain and free trade with the United States would be more beneficial to us. (Loud applause.) We should meet the United States on any further reductions or abolition of the tariffs. (Applause.) No traitor will ever dare again, now that the blood of the two nations has been mingled in France, to say: 'No truck or trade with the Yankees.' (Wild applause.) As the American market is open to our goods, article for article, we should open the Canadian market to the United States." Mr. Drury's amendment was then carried amid scenes of intense enthusiasm.

Free Trade With Britain.

But the United Farmers of Ontario are not forgetting the Mother Country. They adopted practically without discussion the clause in the Winnipeg platform providing for reduction in the customs duty on goods imported from Great Britain to one-half the rates charged under the general tariff, and asked that further gradual, uniform reduction be made in the remaining tariff on British imports that will ensure complete free trade between Great Britain and Canada in five years.

The following tariff charges were also unanimously advocated:

That agricultural implements, farm machinery, vehicles, fertilizers, coal, lumber, cement, illuminating fuel and lubricating oils be placed on the free list, and that all raw materials and machinery used in their manufacture also be placed on the free list.

That all tariff concessions granted to other countries be immediately extended to Great Britain.

The Russian Situation

President Wilson Decides to Go to London for Preliminary Discussion.

(Canadian Press.)

LONDON, December 20. — The London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian suggests that President Wilson's sudden determination to come to England is due to his desire to consult the British government regarding the Russian situation before preliminaries to the peace conference.

The correspondent points to the presence in London of former Premier Kerensky, and Paul N. Milukoff, former Russian Foreign Minister, and leader of the Constitutional Democrats. He also calls attention in this connection to Wednesday's statement by Viscount Milner, Secretary for War, on the Russian situation, which he says was "evidently intended to prepare the public for events to come."

To force the British delegates into line on this question, the workmen through the Trades Union Congress and the Labour party, will conduct a great public campaign. Demonstrations advocating a League of Nations, will be held in London, Glasgow, Manchester, Birmingham, Newcastle, Cardiff, Leeds and Bristol. The first demonstration will take place in Albert Hall here on January 2nd.

The speakers will include Arthur Henderson, George Lansbury, George Bernard Shaw and Ramsay Macdonald. THE WEATHER

The particularly fine weather that has prevailed since Monday is apparently about to suffer a break in its continuance. A white frost this morning, the overcast skies and a falling barometer indicate a change, which will not likely, however, be of long duration, as better weather is back of it again. Lowest temperature last night, 20 degrees. To-day at noon, 35 degrees.—W.P.

SOCIALIST LITERATURE

Three Stratford Men Fined for Having Publications Banned by the Government—Judge Said It Was Harmful.

"CANADIAN FORWARDS"

STRATFORD, Dec. 19.—The cases against Arthur Skidmore, Ernest Rossiter and Harry Cook, jr., which charged against each "that the accused did have in his possession or on his premises in his occupation or under his control within Canada objectionable matter as defined by the consolidated orders respecting censorship passed by the Governor-General in Council, dated May 21, 1918, were finally disposed of this morning by Police Magistrate Makins. All three defendants were declared guilty after hearing of evidence pro and con.

At three o'clock this afternoon sentences were imposed as follows: Ernest Rossiter, $100 or two months in jail; Harry Cook, $300 or four months in jail, and Arthur Skidmore, $500 and 30 days in jail, or failing payment of fine at the end of 30 days six months' imprisonment.

Such Literature Harmful Now.

In passing sentence the Magistrate said: "In dealing with this I feel no heavier penalty should be imposed than is absolutely necessary in each case, but in view of the unsettled state of the country at the present time I feel that such literature could only do harm, and to maintain the law I must impose a penalty. I would be unfair to impose a penalty on all of the men, as I feel that the part played by each man should be considered."

Making sis findings known his Worship, in addressing Skidmore and Cook, said that he felt they were leaders in the movement, and that through them others had become involved. Rossiter, he said, he felt was repentant of the part he had played, and consequently this lightened his penalty.

Mr. McPherson announced that by request of the Minister of Justice all proceedings under the original charge of being members of the Social Democrat party would be stayed. As there were no other charges against Ald. Newman, Mr. McPherson said that he might leave court if he wished.

Extraordinary Legislation.

A quantity of Socialistic literature was put in as evidence, but the only papers considered were several "Canadian Forwards," which were found in the men's houses. In this connection the solicitors — W. G. Owens, Tom Brown and F. H. Thompson, K.C.—in making their plea, said that, inasmuch as this action had been launched under extraordinary legislation, which the Government had been given power to pass during the war, now that the war was over these things should be set aside, and the law administered in the correct way, by statute.

Must Feed the Prisoners of War

500 More Locomotives May be Demanded From Germany—List of Prisoners to be

A PENALTY

PARIS, Dec. 20.—According to Berlin despatches received here the Germans between December 17 and December 26 must deliver up to the allies 1,700 locomotives. In the periods from December 27 to January 6, and January 7 to January 16, two additional batches of 1,700 must be turned over to the allies. It is asserted that if the deliveries are not carried out with regularity the Germans will be forced to give up 500 additional locomotives as a penalty.

Other despatches from Germany say that the French general, Nudant, during the negotiations of the international armistice commission, requested an authentic list of all the war prisoners liberated by Germany and also a list containing the names of all prisoners who died in that country.

It is asserted that the French delegates also reminded Germany that she must feed prisoners of war during their journey home.

Police Strike Still Continues

All is Quiet in Toronto To-day.

Canadian Press:

TORONTO, Dec. 20.— Representatives of police constables, who have been on strike since Wednesday morning, say this afternoon that they will return to duty at once, if the Police Commission will allow them to retain their "Trades and Labour charter" until a Royal Commission decides whether or not the police can have such affiliations, and be consistent in their duty to the public. Reports indicate little increase in crime in the city the two days and two nights without police protection. This morning there is no disorderliness on the streets and little confusion of traffic.

This conference will be attended by delegates from enemy countries, as well as the allies, and will be held at Lauzanne, Switzerland, from January 6th to the 15th.

The Canadian delegates to this conference will include Mr. Draper, and one other, still to be appointed, probably Gustav Franc, of Montreal, or J. C. Watters, of Ottawa.

ATHENS, Dec. 20.—Several casualties occurred in a clash between Bulgarian and Serbian soldiers near Krousova, a despatch from Seres reported to-day.

Hindenburg Will Form New Front

German Government Has Asked the Hun General for An Explanation—The Active Army.

COUNTER MOVEMENT

(Canadian Press.)

PARIS, December 20. — Field Marshal Hindenburg has informed the German government that it is his intention to form a new front six miles behind the neutral zone fixed by the armistice, says a Zurich despatch.

The government has asked the Field Marshal for an explanation, adds the despatch, but has not received a reply.

It also announced that two regiments of the active army will be sent to Frankfort-on-the-Main at an early date. The correspondent affirms that Major-General Scheuch, the Prussian War Minister, Field Marshal Von Hindenburg, and General Lequid (probably Lieut. General Lequis, former governor of Metz), who is in command of the active troops in Berlin, are behind a counter revolutionary movement. He declares that the existing government is manifestly incapable of preventing a realization of their schemes.

President Will Visit England

The Allies and United States Are Harmonious in Peace Preliminaries.

(Special to Examiner.)

WASHINGTON, December 20. — The Allies and the United States are harmonious in the peace preliminaries, the State Department announced to-day.

This word was given to counteract the German propaganda which seeks to split the nations by discord. The President has done comparatively little in Paris so far. He has been met with extreme cordiality. It is admitted that certain differences of opinion may develop but the State Department believes that such will be the honest differences which would prevail in any group with varied interests.

President Wilson will return King Victor Emmanuel's call, and will be his guest at a dinner to-night, in the Italian embassy.

The president plans to visit London immediately after Christmas. He will stay in England for four days.

POLITICAL PRISONERS

Five Thousand Portuguese Citizens Held for More Than a Year—Startling Revelations.

WERE TORTURED

(Special to The Examiner.)

PARIS, Dec. 20.—Five thousand Portuguese citizens have been held as secret political prisoners for more than a year, Alfonso Costa, former Portuguese Premier, declared in an interview with the Matin to-day. The sufferings of these men who were whipped and otherwise tortured were responsible for the assassination of Sidonic Paes, President of Portugal, it was intimated. Some of the victims of this modern inquisition were even executed, Costa said.

The prisoners, according to Costa, included former ministers, former presidents of the chamber, senators, deputies, officers, soldiers and sailors. They have been imprisoned since the Paes coup d'etat in 1917.

Costa said he had revealed only a part of Portugal's sufferings which he declared explained the recent acts of violence.

Voice of The People

To the Editor of the Examiner,

Dear Sir,—Please allow me space in your paper to make a suggestion. I wonder what our worthy Mayor and citizens of Peterboro would think of decorating the city patriotically for Christmas this being the first Christmas in Peace in four years, as we had entered the fifth year of war, we have Christmas in peace what we never dreamed of. And whom do we thank for peace? Would it not be pleasing to God to have the City and every home decorated with the flag he blessed so much with victory. The flags with the Christmas decorations and our hands try and do something in the music line to make us feel that our City of Peterboro is doing something extra for Christmas this year. The flags make the homes and the city look so pretty and cheery. I mean every home to decorate and cheer up for that day. Though there are many homes saddened by the death of a dear one, through the cause of war, don't make your house dark and sad for that day even though your heart is broken Thank God for peace.

A Suggestion.

Australians Will Not Be Permitted to Cross Canada

Statement Issued by the Canadian Railway War Board Covering the Point.

CANADIANS RETURN FIRST

MONTREAL, Dec. 20.— Australian fighters from France will not be allowed to cross Canada on their way to Australia, as they wish to do, until Canada's own soldiers have been brought back and their women and children returned to their Canadian homes.

A statement to this effect was issued from the offices of the Canadian Railway War Board.

"No discourtesy to the Australians is intended," explained the Canadian Railway War Board official. "It would be to the advantage of all Canada to have these soldiers cross our country. If by any chance it can be arranged for these men to wait for a time, the Canadian Railway War Board will undertake to move them.

Cannot Do More.

"We are compelled to refuse in the meantime because no transportation system on the North American continent, not even our Canadian system, which holds the world's record for fast, safe and comfortable troops movements over long distances, can do more than handle its own demobilization work.

"An eminent Canadian in London is quoted as being surprised that Canada can handle only thirty thousand soldiers and soldiers' families in a month, whereas the Americans propose to handle three hundred thousand.

"Whether the American railways can deliver to all parts of their country from their Atlantic seaboard three hundred thousand soldiers per month is not a question concerning this board.

Moved Troops Successfully.

"One transcontinental railway system, and one only, has been able to stand up without a single general breakdown under war strain, and has moved troops more successfully in comparison to the mileage covered than any other country. That country was Canada.

"Two men cannot pass in the same instant over the same spot. Neither can two trains. A strip of railway track has just as definite capacity as a gallon measure. The Canadian Railway War Board, acting under the direction of the Government of Canada, has said it can handle approximately thirty thousand returning fighters and their families per month. It has placed in charge of the demobilization committee, with the Government's approval, a brilliant transportation expert. The Canadian public may rely upon it that when this board undertakes to handle thirty thousand a month, there is, to say the least, no danger of any other country handling more in proportion to the number of ports at its disposal.

Handled Quickly.

"Col. Maughan, chairman of our special committee on the demobilization movement, has taken pains to see not only that the troops are handled quickly, but with a minimum of inconvenience and discomfort. All engineers are under orders to drive carefully at night so as not to jar the returning men more than can be helped. Time is to be taken to give 'velvet shunts' in all coupling operations. If so far as it is humanly possible soldiers will arrive, at least at the larger centres, in waking hours.

"Don't let anyone imagine that there won't be exceptions to the rule, that there will be no broken down engines, or lines tied up with snow, but remember at the same time that this Canadian Railway War Board under the special instructions of the Minister of Railways and his colleagues in the Government is giving, and will continue to give, a service in keeping with the Canadian railroading traditions, that is, better than any other anywhere in the world."

Young Man Was Too Friendly

Will Eat His Christmas Dinner in Gaol for Accosting Two Girls.

Arino Guiseppi has had an itinerant career, but it ended abruptly this morning when the young man was sentenced to a month in jail. Arino has been in the city only five days, but his presence has become objectionable and many complaints have been received by the police Arino is in the habit of stopping girls on the street and asking them to come for a walk. On Monday at noon Arino stopped two girls on George street and asked them to take a jaunt. When they refused he walked around behind them and took them by the arm. They managed to get away from him, but Arino, ever on the watch, saw them again at the corner of Charlotte and George streets and stopped them again, but it was the last time. According to his own account, Arino came here from Niagara Falls, where he stayed only two days. Previous to that he had visited Brantford, Hamilton and Toronto, staying for short periods.

The Magistrate advised him to leave the city at once on the expiration of his prison term.

Mr. Peter Wright Gave An Eloquent Address Last Night

The Labourmen of Great Britain Received a Rude Shock When It Came to a Question of International Brotherhood.

BOYCOTT THE HUN

It is regrettable that the audience gathered to hear at the Collegiate Hall evening, Peter Wright, the overseas delegate to Canada and the United States of the noted and most powerful British Seamen's and Firemen's Union was not in point of numbers representative of what should have been Peterborough's interest in the mission and the object. It was to be expected, as suggested, that the meeting should take, in one sense, the form of a reception by labour men to this, the representative of the most powerful labour organization in the world. The attendance was limited. But that did not in any way interfere with the presentation of the case for the prosecution against the Hun as told by the speaker of the evening.

A Gifted Speaker.

What has appeared in the press as to the thrilling recital and vivid word pictures presented by Mr. Wright was amply verified. A man of strong personality, wide experience, a world traveler, gifted in language, earnest and powerful in verbal description, he held the audience engrossed in the recital. One may read of the tragedies and the crimes committed by the Hun on the seas of the Channel and around the British coast, but written description falls short of bringing a realization such as unfolded by the eloquent sentences and earnest statements as they flow from his lips.

A Rude Awakening.

In opening he told of the awakening that came to the Union men of Great Britain when it was revealed that after all the professions of international action to be taken by men of all countries to stop recourse to arms and to carry out the dictates of the military autocrats, that German workmen and Union men were only puppets of the Kaiser, and indeed willing tools in the commission of crimes of national enormity. Relation after relation followed, depicting the heroism of the British sailor; his fearless bravery in guarding the coast, the fight to suppress the submarine, the cruelty of the Hun to the men helpless in the ocean following the sinking of the ships and destruction of the boats. Tales of incredible heartlessless and depravity, developing from his own experience and the relation of others. Most hearty and sympathetic applause followed the conclusion of periods, culminating in a hearty and unanimous assent to the platform of Hun repression and punishment as outlined by the speaker.

Wants Action.

He came to Canada, and will visit the States, not to ask for money, but for action. To see that the people of these countries will build up against Germany a commercial boycott that will exist until the British Seamen's Union find that the German is fit to be allowed to mingle and communicate with other nations. He said that not for years would British seamen sail an English ship into a German port. That no vessel that would take on a German passenger would leave port until that passenger had been fired off the decks. He asked that Canada, as a part of the Empire would see that German goods were excluded, that the penalties to be paid in money should not be taken in cheap German products. That already millions of dollars of German made products, manufactured in Sweden, Norway and Switzerland lay waiting to scheme entrance through neutral countries.

The Resolution.

He told of the resolution in England that never again should Germans enter into English commercial or social life. The Hun would be ruled out of civilized association for years and years. The Union had decided that it would not trust the politicians. That all England knew just what would happen at the first indication that avarice, duplicity, and craving for gain came up. He was here to rouse the Dominion to a sense of the part it could play in the scheme of retribution.

When he concluded general regret was felt that other engagements for the evening had compelled him to curtail his address.

Guest of the Club.

Mayor Duncan occupied the chair and introduced Mr. Wright. Judge Huycke briefly, as chairman of the local branch of the Navy League, added words of commendation of both speaker and mission. Before dispersing Mr. J. J. Hartley moved a vote of thanks, and in so doing expressed himself quite out of the formal way, but vigorously and most effectively. Alderman J. Edgar seconded the resolution with a few brief and appropriate remarks. And finally the audience stood up and sang the National Anthem.

Mr. Wright, as the guest of the Peterborough Club, spent the rest of the evening in personal relation of other incidents and descriptive of the situation in England and on the continent.

Lots of women give more thought to the selection of a gown than of a husband.

ummer Man Describes Roads as Miniature Lakes and Mud Holes

Says the Longer They Are Let Go the More Money It Will Take to Put Them In Condition.

Editor Norwood Register:

Dear Sir, I have been much interested in the discussion in your paper about county roads, and I am taking advantage of your columns to have a few words to say on this topic. I for one would like to see some system adopted to better the condition of our highways, for this would certainly be a step in the right direction, for they are badly out of repair. Mr. Elliott's statement assuring us that the farmers are all in favour of the county road system is no excuse to let our roads go to decay and become miniature lakes and mud holes, like the 9th line of Dummer. We have got to repair these roads and the sooner we wake up to the fact the better it will be for the travelling public and the ratepayers who will have to pay the expenses whether it is repaired under the County Road System or any other system, or pet scheme of some county official, and the longer we are making up our minds how it is going to be done the worse the roads will become and the more money it will take to repair them. Then we, the ratepayers, should at least be given an opportunity to decide what we do want. Let us be the ones to say if we want to have the County Road System or not, so if the County Council of Peterborough are afraid to make a progressive movement and a step in the right direction let the people do it at our next municipal election.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, I am,

Yours truly,

WM. MATTHEWS.

Sec. Centre Dummer Farmers' Club.

A WELL-GUARDED SECRET

(The Stereoscope in War.)

One of the best guarded secrets of the war has been the extraordinarily successful use made by the Royal Air Force of the stereoscope as an aid to aerial intelligence.

Everyone is familiar with the optical device by which two photographs are viewed side by side through a pair of lenses, with the result that the objects represented are seen to stand out in striking relief. Quite early in the war, when specially constructed cameras were first being used for photographing the enemy's trenches and fortifications from the air, it occurred to an enterprising officer in the Royal Flying Corps that if two photographs were taken in the air, separated only by an interval of a few seconds, the movement of the airplane in the meantime would sufficiently alter the perspective to produce a successful stereoscopic picture.

Fortunately an unique object for testing this idea existed in the Salient at Ypres, where the stark ruins of the famous Cloth Hall, and other buildings in the old Belgian town, towered naked towards the sky, casting long spire-like shadows upon the ground.

The early experiments were only partially successful. Many technical difficulties had to be overcome. It was found that a longer interval of time between the exposure was required than at first seemed necessary, and some other problems connected with the very low density of aerial negatives demanded solution. But after patient research, some stereoscopic air photos of the finest quality were produced.

With the characteristic energy and foresight of the Royal Air Force, officers and men in all the photographic training stations in Great Britain were set to work to specialize in the rapid production of aerial stereoscopic pictures; and for months past every R. A.F. photographer sent out to the war zone has been fully trained in this highly important branch of R. A. F. work.

Only those who have been privileged to examine specimens of R.A.F. stereoscopic photography can realize how valuable an instrument of intelligence this striking development of British technical resourcefulness placed in our hands. Owing to the high relief in which objects are seen in the stereoscope, it was found possible to estimate to a few inches the height of barricades and entanglements, the depth of trenches and dug-outs, and in other ways to anticipate the character of the difficulties to be overcome by the infantry and tanks.

The information so obtained frequently enabled the enemy's lines to be carried by surprise with very small loss of the British forces.

Lower Prices For Steel Plate

End of Government Control of Prices is in Sight.

The announcement is made from Pittsburgh this week that prices at the mills there are being reduced before the period expires in which the Government controls prices. This action really has the effect of annulling Government control. The federal control was for the purpose of keeping prices from going past certain well-defined maximums, and the action of the mills in voluntarily going under these figures can be interpreted as marking the end of price control in the United States.

Indications also point to a similar course to some extent in Canada. This week steel plate is selling from the warehouse at 7c. per pound, a reduction of 1 cent since last week. It has reached as high as 12 cents per pound, and it is on record that it even touched 15 cents during the war period, but that was before prices were controlled from Washington and Ottawa.

Steel Castings.

No announcement has yet been made as to what disposition will be made of the castings that are piled up around many of the machine shops that have been working on munition orders. There are great piles of these. One Toronto shop that has 9.2 orders, has at least 50,000 of these blanks in its yards, and the chances are that they will be scrapped. Each of these castings weighs approximately 370 pounds in its rough state, so it will be seen that in this one place there will be 9,250 tons of materia ed of. This ought to be a great source of supply for the melters for some time. First operations on the machining of American shells have been stopped this week, and the business will be wound up about the 25th of the month. Some of the fuse contracts are still good, and they may be allowed to stand for some time.

Speedy action on the part of the Government in making readjustments in connection with contract cancellations would assist in removing traces of war from the trade as speedily as possible.

The scrap metal market is still in a poor condition. No sales are being made unless there is considerable urgency in the deal. Prices for materials are very uncertain, and any quotation that is made is hardly indicative of the real strength of the market.—Canadian Machinery and Manufacturing News.

Self-preservation is the first law of nature and getting even with people is the second.

Why Yearn After the Small Farm?

Strange That City Men Never Yearn for Many Broad Acres.

One often hears a city man when he is tired or has quarreled with his boss or can't meet his bills or just feels disgusted, wishing he had a "little farm." That's the independent life, he soliloquizes, where a man doesn't need any money, where his living is assured, etc. If he were wishing for a railroad, or a steamship or an automobile factory, he'd want a big one. Imagine a discontented man wishing for a canal barge. But it's always a "little farm," for few men realize that one man usually does all the work on a little farm, that he gets little or no wages for his work, and that most little farmers are lucky to break even in ordinary times. It's the big farm that makes the money just as it is the big business of any other sort. To get data on how little there is in a little farm and the rate at which profits increase as the farms grow bigger the Department of Agriculture has made a survey of 342 farms in the best region of Kentucky, which is one of the best farming sections in the world.

"However skillful or energetic a farmer may be, or however fertile his land, he cannot hope for great profits in farming if his business is on a small scale," according to the information gathered.

"While crop yields, returns from live stock, type of farming, diversity, and the selection and proportioning of crops and live stock are factors which directly affect farm profits, the success of the business in general farming depends to a very large degree upon its size. It should be kept in mind that maintaining soil fertility is as important as obtaining profits, and this is done on the ordinary diversified farms to a large extent by crop rotations and a proper system of keeping live stock.

"In the area surveyed 29 farmers on farms of less than 100 acres made an average labour income of only $81; 60 farms, averaging 286 acres, averaged $356, and 46 farms, averaging 715 acres, averaged $1,133 labour income. The farms showing highest earnings per acre were better stocked, had greater diversity, less idle and waste land, and better economy in utilization of horse labour. Farms over 400 acres in size averaged about 120 productive days' work per horse, while farms under 100 acres averaged but about eighty days. The cost of man labour was also lower on the large farms. Many farmers were able to increase the size of their business and add to their income by renting additional land.

"Next in importance to size of business in profitable farming is crop yield. While high yields are essential they should be made economically for it is possible to secure them at too great expense. In the section surveyed the keeping of live stock is one of the most important factors in maintaining good crop yields. This practice also enables the ultilization of waste products, which are fed to stock, and increases the value of grain and feedstuffs on the farm by feeding them. Generally speaking, on large and medium-sized farms from one-half to two-thirds of the total farm receipts should come from live stock."

MONTREAL HOTEL SOLD

Freeman's Changes Hands for $250,000.

MONTREAL, Dec. 19.—Freeman's Hotel was this morning sold for $250,000. Before the war, the land upon which the hotel stands was considered worth $500,000, as it is in the heart of the financial district.

Dancing at the Collegiate Institute

KITCHENER, Dec. 20. — At the regular meeting of the High School Board here, the request of the Literary Society of the High School that dancing be allowed at the Commencement, the Hallow-een party and the February At Home was granted. The permission is permanent, and does away with the frequently recurring question of whether dancing should be allowed at the institution. In opposition to the request of the members of the Literary Society was a memorial from the Ministerial Association requesting the Board to refuse the request of the students on the ground that dancing is not a part of the curriculum and inasmuch as the practice is at variance with the opinion of the parents of a large number of the students attending the High School. The Ministerial Association pointed out that if dancing were allowed it would lower the prestige of the school and might even place some of the pupils at variance with the ideals which obtain in their homes.

Mrs. Arthur Stevenson and Mrs. W. R. Morris Nominated to Enter School Board Contest

Local Council of Women Will Endorse Both Candidates—Mrs. Morris Has Never Yet Discovered a House Built by Man That a Woman Could Not Yet Improve Upon.

The names of Mrs. W. R. Morris and Mrs. Arthur Stevenson will probably appear among the candidates for the four vacancies in the Board of Education for 1919. At a meeting of the Local Council of Women it was unanimously decided to endorse their candidature if either of both decide to run.

In the discussion following the naming of the prospective candidates, Mrs. R. H. Harstone said that public opinion had grown very strong lately regarding women school trustees and the Council would be willing to support the candidates.

Mrs. Morris said that it was by no means he first time she had had the question of becoming a school trustee put to her. At the time of the death of he late Dr. Burnham, she had been asked to fill his place for the balance (three months) of the year. Later she had again been asked to accept nomination, but the gentleman who asked her to do so had arrived too late at the nomination after having received the endorsation of several of the Woman's Council.

Advised One Candidate

She said that talks she had had with old campaigners had convinced her that to have one woman candidate would be better tactics than two. The moral effect of the woman candidate going in with a sweeping majority would be better than for two to go in with small majorities or to split the vote.

The matter was finally left to the discretion of the two ladies named if both or one should run. The influence of the members of the Council of Women was asked in soliciting votes for the candidates.

Extend Resolution

Mrs. Mowat, who was oppointed to obtain statistics of the average age of children in the third and fourth classes in regard to the motion of the Renfrew Council of Women, that sanitation, domestic science, sewing, etc., be taught in the third and fourth readers of the public and separate schools, which motion they asked the Local Council to support, said that the average age of the entrance candidate is 14 years and the third reader 11 years.

She said that Inspector Mowat thought the Miniser of Education would welcome a resolution from the Council of Women. The Local Council decided to endorse the resolution and the delegate at the Executive meeting to be held in January will be instructed to ask that the work be extended in certain phases to junior classes.

Chautaugua Tickets

Mrs. Harstone reported that about 500 Chautauqua tickets had been sold. She expressed her appreciation of the citizens' support and the captain's work in the sale of tickets.

Same Method

It was decided to use the same method in nomination of officers for the coming year as was used last election.

Endorsed Resolution

The resolution from the Toronto Local Council of Women, asking that two women be appointed to the housing committee recently appointed by the Government, with the privilege of the National Council naming the women, was heartily endorsed by the Local Council. "I never saw a house built by a man that a woman could not improve upon," said Mrs. Morris.

Music & Drama

"THE HONEYMOON LIMITED"

"The Honeymoon Limited" a musical show that while hardly of Metropolitan calibre, proved amusing and entertaining, was witnessed by a large audience at the Grand last night. There were songs galore, a supply of comedy, some of which was new and some quite familiar and a series of specialties that kept the production from dragging. There was one monologue that was marked by neither good taste or humour that might profitably be eliminated and some of the broad comedy had been lifted from the burlesque circuit without hurting the latter any by its absence but on the whole the production got by nicely. A piano specialty made a distinct hit and a violin stunt by one of the feminine principles also scored heavily.

Travesties on several New York successes were cleverly staged and although the plot was as attentuated as customary in musical shows there were enough special features to carry the production throught to success.

REFUSE TO ACCEPT COLLIER'S ESTATE

Dunne, Garvan, and Payne Whitney Ask the Court to Give Widow $5,000,000 Property.

THE WILL CUT HER OFF

The will of Robert J. Collier head of P. F. Collier & Son Publishers of Collier's Weekly and of other publications, who died suddenly at his home, 1,067 Fifth Avenue, on Nov. 8, on the day he returned from France, left the bulk of his estate to his friends, Payne Whitney, Finley Peter Denne and Francis P. Garvan as residuary legatees. They have had charge of his business affairs since 1914. He made no bequest to his wife, Mrs. Sarah Steward Collier, on the ground that her father, James J. Van Alen, had provided for her amply. The residuary legatees, who were also named as executors, renounced their right to act and to take the property, valued at more than $5,000,000, and in a letter to Mrs. Mollier, made public when Mrs. Collier filed a petition yesterday for the probate of the will said:

"Much as we regret being placed in a position in which we might appear to disregard the wishes of our friend, as expressed in his will, we feel that we must, nevertheless, decline the bequest of these properties. We feel that the estate should now go to its natural ultimate destination and that we should, therefore, renounce this bequest of the residuary estate in your favor."

The will, dated July 9, 1917, gave $150,000 to George G. Kennedy and $50,000 to Frank H. Rice, both officers of P. F. Collier & Son, who have been associated in the business for many years, "for long and faithful services" to the decedent and his father, the late P. F. Collier, with the direction that the bequests be paid out of the profits of P. F. Collier & Son at any time within three years. As a result of the renunciation by Mr. Collier's three friends of their right to act and to take the residuary estate, theaw would then give precedence to these two business associates. In order that Mrs. Collier's sole right might be unquestioned, Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Rice also renounced their right as executors

Mrs. Collier is her husband's sole next of kin and for that reason she becomes the sole legatee for the residue left to Messrs. Dunne, Whitney and Garven. The estate consists almost entirely of the publishing business and Collier's Weekly, his other properties, including his extensive country place, Wickatonk, in New Jersey, having been vested in Mrs Collier during her husband's lifetime.

Messrs, Whitney, Dunne and Garvan enclosed the renunciation of Messrs. Kennedy and Rice to act as executors as well as their own, and in reply Mrs. Collier wrote Mr. Whitney for himself and his associates that she appreciated their acts and would apply for administration letters for the estate, which she did yesterday. She expressed her "appreciation and gratitude," for their offer to co-operate with her, and said she would gladly avail herself of their "generous offer of advice and assistance."

Pte. W. Curtin Was Gallant Fighter

Peterboro Soldier Was Buried in a Canadian Cemetery in France.

Mr. David Curtin of East City, has received the following letter concerning his son, Pte. William Curtin who was killed in action in the last battle of Cambrai on October 11th. The letter follows:

B.E.F. France,

My dear Sir,—The Coonel of the 21st. Canadian Battalion has asked me to express to you on behalf of the officers and men our deep regret in the death of your gallant son, who gave his life in the action on the eleventh of this month. He was one of those willing sacrifices that made possible the subsequent German retreat.

He was buried with all our comrades in a Canadian Cemetery with a Christian burial.

His personal effects will in due time be forwarded by the proper authorities

Your grief in his loss, we his comrades share and I trust that the vision of a better and happier world, which is growing clearer may help you and comfort you.

Yours very faithfully,
D. L., Rensom, Captain,
Chaplain, 21st Canadian Battalion.

LIEUT.-COL. DUBUC PAYS HIGH TRIBUTE TO ENGLISH PEOPLE

MONTREAL, Dec. 19.—Lieut.-Col. A. E. Dubuc, D.S.O., commander of the 22nd French Canadian Battalion, who has just arrived home paid a warm tribute to the people of England. "I am profoundly glad to be back," he said, "but let me say something I feel deeply and will never forget. It is the immense kindness and tenderness of the wonderful people of England. Their generosity, open-heartedness and unparalleled treatment toward Canadians is something a little more than words are capable of expressing. From Generals down to the 'Tommies' we all feel that the people of England have reached almost an idealism in their greatness and kindness."

Col. Dubuc also paid a tribute to the work of Lady Drummond on behalf of the Canadians, to whom he said the soldiers owe more than they can ever repay.

Col. Dubuc was wounded three times, the last so seriously that his life was despaired of.

In the "show" in which Col. Dubuc was wounded for the last time, he said out of 23 officers and 625 other ranks, there were 23 officers casualties (every one was killed or wounded) and 505 of the other ranks either layed down their lives or will hereafter wear the scars of battle. This all happened in 24 hours. It was on August 27th in front of Cherisy, in the attack on Cambrai and the start of the great Arras battle that was the beginning of the end, that Lieut.-Col. Dubuc was hit in the eye, by a machine gun bullet, and was given up for dead. The command of the 22nd automatically passed to Major Vanier at 2.30 that day, and he carried on until he lost his leg.

When the Colonel was wounded and finally carried to a casualty clearing station, he was so dangerously ill that the nursing sister had packed all his personal affairs up to send to his mother. He finally recovered sufficiently to reach England and spent some months in Sir John Ellerman's Hospital, Regents Park, London, and latterly was convalescing at the Queen's Hospital.

Schedules for Junior And Intermediate Groups Arranged Yesterday

Local hockey yesterday became more than speculation when Mr. R. Butler, of Lindsay, convenor of Intermediate Group No. 2, and of Junior Group No. 3, called a meeting of the representatives of the various teams at the Queen's Hotel, Port Hope, Mr. Butler looking after Lindsay's interests, Mr. Ed. Thomas, Belleville; Mr. H. R. Williams, Whitby Military Hospital; Mr. H. F. Bradley, Oshawa; Mr. Brimsley Lowe, Port Hope, and Father Leo E. Gorman, Peterborough.

With very little discussion the Intermediate schedule was drawn up as follows:

Jan. 3—Lindsay at Oshawa.
Jan. 8—Whitby at Peterborough.
Jan. 13—Peterborough at Lindsay.
Jan. 13—Oshawa at Whitby.
Jan. 20—Lindsay at Peterborough.
Jan. 20—Whitby at Oshawa.
Jan. 27—Peterborough at Whitby.
Jan. 27—Oshawa at Lindsay.
Feb. 3—Lindsay at Whitby.
Feb. 3—Oshawa at Peterborough.
Feb. 10—Whitby at Lindsay.
Feb. 10—Peterborough at Oshawa.

Referees—Lou Marsh, Jerry Laflamme, Stan Burgoyne.

As expected, the junior squabble was not without its troubles. Port Hope steadfastly refused to be grouped with Peterborough and Lindsay. Their bone of contention was the inconvenience of train connection. They claimed that they should be grouped with the Lake Front teams and that Belleville be placed in the Peterborough-Lindsay group. Peterborough and Lindsay representatives claimed the same inconvenience and pointed to their intermediate teams travelling to Oshawa and Whitby. It then developed that Convenor Bradley of Oshawa, had met representatives of the Lake Front teams yesterday in Port Hope and Belleville had been taken into that group, leaving Port Hope to play with Peterborough and Lindsay or to drop out altogether. Finally Port Hope decided to remain in the game, and so the much debated question is settled for the present.

The junior schedule then is as follows:

Jan. 3—Port Hope at Lindsay.
Jan. 10—Lindsay at Peterborough.
Jan. 17—Peterborough at Port Hope.
Jan. 24—Lindsay at Port Hope.
Jan. 31—Port Hope at Peterborough.
Feb. 7—Peterborough at Lindsay.

Referees—Burgoyne, Laflamme and McCreath.

WEATHER TOO MILD FOR CURLING, GAMES WILL BE DELAYED

The expectations that there would be curling for Christmas have been upset by the weather of the past ten days. It has been more than favourable to the lightly laden coal bins, but it has also prevented Angus McIntosh from building up the seven rinks for the first games. It is now believed that the club will be lucky to get under way by New Year's, on which holiday the annual President vs. Vice-President games are played. The first flooding has held satisfactorily but there has not been enough frost to build up the ice bed.

The Curling Club has seldom faced a season under better conditions than this year, and all the members, veterans and recruits are looking forward to the regular games and the promised feature events.

The membership limit of 140 has been reached and other applications are on the waiting list. There is quite an infusion of new blood this winter, and it is the intention of the committee to give them every opportunity of learning the game as quickly as possible.

The Open Bonspiel.

The first draft plans of the open bonspiel indicate that this will be the biggest curling event ever held in Peterborough. Mr. W. G. Morrow is in charge of the committee, and it has been stated that both the Charlotte and Brock street rinks will be used for the games.

It is also hoped that rinks from the local club will be able to visit all the clubs in the district this winter not only for the games thus afforded, but also to bring the curlers of this district more closely together.

Manitoba Adopts O.H.A. Offside Rule

WILL ALLOW SUBSTITUTES, BUT MADE RESTRICTIONS ON SOLDIER-PLAYERS

WINNIPEG, Dec. 19.—Some radical changes were adopted in the rules of hockey to be played in Manitoba this season, when the Manitoba amateur hockey association last evening decided to have the six-man game, the O.H.A., on-side rule which allows a man to be asked on-side, and no offside off the goalkeeper within ten feet in front of the net. In a match each team will be allowed substitutes to be used at any time during the game, and in addition, a substitute goalkeeper The substitution are to be made without interruption of the play and only six men are to be allowed on the ice at one time. The length of periods was not changed, the Manitoba body favoring the old half-hour system. The residence rule stands It was discussed for a while with a view to favoring returned soldiers

The only concession made is that a returned soldier's absence on military duty will not affect the continuity of his residence in his "home town" as his previous place of residence is termed

Peter Gettas Made Record Bowling Score

Last Wednesday afternoon at the Water Street Alleys, Pete Gettas broke his previous record in Five Pins of 813 with the new score of 873 for three games, which is believed to be the record all over America. F. C. Weber also rolled three fine games wtih a total of 797. The score of P. Gettas—281, 297, 295—873.

Farmers Demand Free Trade

That all corporations engaged in the manufacture of products protected by the customs tariff be obliged to publish annually comprehensive and accurate statements of their earnings.

That every claim for tariff protection by any industry should be heard publicly before a special committee of Parliament.

Methods of Raising Revenue.

The farmers propose to make up the revenue lost by these tariff reductions in the following manner:

By a direct tax on unimproved land values, including all natural resources.

By a graduated personal income tax.

By a graduated inheritance tax on large estates.

By a graduated income tax on the profits of corporations.

That in levying and collecting the business profits tax the Dominion Government should insist that it be absolutely on the basis of the actual cash invested in the business and that no consideration be allowed for what is popularly known as watered stock.

That no more natural resources be alienated from the Crown but brought into use only under short-term leases, in which the interests of the public shall be properly safeguarded, such leases to be granted only by public auction.

While the tariff changes were being considered one delegate said: "Don't stir up the manufacturers."

"We don't give that for the manufacturers," said President Halbert, snapping his fingers. A storm of cheers greeted this.

Soldiers' Problems.

There was a long discussion over the demobilization of the soldiers and vocational training. The Winnipeg recommendation that vocational training should be confined to soldiers unfitted for their former occupations was struck out on the ground that all the returned soldiers should receive vocational training if they desired it. A couple of retired Colonels were giving their views when one delegate from Frontenac exclaimed: "We shouldn't sit here and listen to a few Colonels who have never been in the trenches. Let's hear what the Tommies have got to say." This was applauded in some parts of the hall, but President Halbert rebuked the Frontenac delegate with the remark: "We will never be United Farmers by throwing insinuations. If the returned soldiers want their dues they must not throw stones."

The Senate.

One of the planks in the Farmers' Platform was "The reform of the Federal Senate." It was disposed of at the evening session of the United Farmers of Ontario.

"You can't reform the dead," said Mr. W. L. Smith of Orono. "I move that the word 'burial' be substituted for the word 'reform.'" (Laughter.)

"What would you do with defunct politicians?" asked a delegate.

"Kill them," replied Mr. Smith.

"Chloroform them," exclaimed another delegate, and a third shouted: "Carried." It was unanimous.

Perpetuate Prohibition.

Prohibition of the manufacture, sale and importation of intoxicating liquor in Canada was unanimously advocated on motion of Mr. Smith, seconded by Colonel Fraser.

The meeting also favoured giving returned soldiers' six months post-discharge pay.

Collection For Policemen.

Two Labour leaders, Charles O'Donnell and Walter Brown, appealed on behalf of the striking policeman and when the hat was passed around $56 was collected.

Titles were condemned and discontinuance of the practise of conferring them upon Canadians was urged; abolition of patronage and the immediate removal of censorship of the press and the restoration of the rights of free speech were favoured.

TRAGIC NEWS FOR EAST CITY MOTHER

Mrs. William Chrow Prostrated With Grief as Result of Her Son's Death.

The bitterest blow that can come to a family at present is the news of the death of one of the dear ones on active service since the armistice was signed. Such a blow was received yesterday by Mr. and Mrs. William Chrow, 43 Sophia street, in the death of their only son, Corp. Albert Chrow, who succumbed to an attack of Spanish influenza while on garrison duty in St. Lucia, British West Indies, on Tuesday, December 14th. Full of hope of her only boy's return in the near future, now that affairs were righting themselves, Mrs. Chrow had laid by and denied herself of different luxuries to give the young soldier a fitting reception on his return, when the ominous telegram was received yesterday afternoon. Since then the distracted mother has been prostrated with grief.

Corp. Chrow was formerly employed with the local plant of the Bell Telephone Company, and was transferred to the Oshawa branch. He enlisted in Halifax with the Canadian Engineers in April, 1915, and spent his last leave at home in March, 1916. On the following Good Friday he sailed for St. Lucia.

There are left of the immediate family, his parents and one sister, Hazel.

The remains will be brought to Peterboro as soon as arrangements can be made.

Mr. G. W. Hatton Meets County Men To-morrow

Mr. G. W. Hatton, County Crown Attorney, will meet a committee of the County Council to-morrow morning, for the purpose of arranging for accommodation that was ordered to be provided by Mr. Justice Kelly's judgment. It is understood that the County Council had everything in readiness but were waiting for Mr. Hatton to make known his preference Among the lawyers it was believed today that Mr. Hatton would take the rooms now used as the library for the law association, and in that event, it was stated, the books would be carried to a room upstairs.

MEN ARE FLOCKING NORTH.

Lumber Camp and Mines Are Getting Hundreds of Them and Want More.

TIMMINS, Dec. 17. — The labour situation in the Northland is already showing evidences of improvement, says the Advance. During the past few weeks several hundred men have come into the Porcupine district and more are coming every day. The majority reaching here so far have been for work in the lumber camps. Last week a lumber company brought in a couple of hundred men. The mines, however, are also receiving their share of new men, and many of the old-timers are returning. It is estimated that 2,000 men could be used in the Porcupine camp.

Anniversary Services Held in Lakefield Baptist Church

Addresses Were Given by Rev. B. Davies and Mr. W. C. Senior—The Latter Will Visit Peterboro.

LAKEFIELD, December 18. — The anniversary services were held in the Lakefield Baptist church on Sunday. Mr. W. C. Senior of Toronto, secretary of the plan of finance of the Baptist convention of Ontario and Quebec, was invited to preach the anniversary sermons, which he did very acceptably.

At the morning service Rev. B. Davies, pastor of the church, rendered as a solo, "Will there be any Stars in my Crown?" This selection was given by request.

The speaker took his text from St. Matt. 20, 20-28. He spoke of the ambitious mother of St. James and St John, who asked our Lord to allow her sons to have the places of honor in the kingdom. That is the spirit of the world from all time down to the present day—seeking after the high places. Contrast that with the spirit of Christ, who was content to serve.

The contrasting spirit of the world and the high ideals of Christ, were shown in the war that has waged for the past four years. Germany wanted a place in the sun and used any method, no matter how ruthless or cruel, to attain her ambition. Britain and France, and the other entente allies, showed more the spirit of Christ. The result has been that God has given us peace with victory—peace with honor.

The Foundation.

In early schooldays it is hard to imagine perhaps why Alfred the Great was called Great, as he seemed just an ordinary man, with no pomp or splendour that would invite adulation. But Alfred realized the burden of his responsibilities. He trained his people in farming and laid the foundation of the stable government that we are so proud of — the British Empire. Alfred in serving others made himself great.

Queen Victor had a grand woman's heart, with boundless sympathy for other women, and all the helpless and oppressed, and in uplifting her people by her own personal service she became known as a great queen.

When the United States declared war on Germany, the streets of Washington rang with praises of Woodrow Wilson—he was acclaimed as another Lincoln. This was the highest compliment that the Americans could pay Wilson, as Lincoln was the greatest American that ever lived, and why? Because he devoted his life to service for the uplift of his helpless brothers. Lincoln, with an intensiveness almost profane, broke the chains of slavery and freed the blacks.

The real mark of greatness is service, and it is our work to devote ourselves to the uplift of our fellow men. As our Lord Himself said — "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Three Divisions.

There are three divisions in the Baptist church: First, the Evangelical, and where would they be without that? It is a most important branch of the church. Second: Teaching, which centres around the Bible, the Holy Word of God. Third: Business for the Church's existence would cease without that side. For instance, the rich young man, who came to Jesus, had kept the commandments, and lived a good life, and wanted to follow Him, but he was unwilling to give away his vast possessions, that he might have treasure in heaven. God gives us more than we need so we can give back to Him.

Self-Centred.

We must avoid at all costs the tendency to become self centred, forgetting to expand. Our Lord Himself was an example and exponent of expansion. When St. John the Baptist, languishing in prison, the victim of Herod and his vulgar daughter, sent messengers to find out if Jesus was really the Christ he had foretold, he received this reply from our Lord, "The poor have the Gospel preached to them, the lame walk, the blind receive their sight."

God has committed to the Baptist denomination a wonderful opportunity to be great in the kingdom of heaven. God is honouring the Baptist missions in India, in Japan, in China and Africa, in a most marvellous way.

In closing Mr. Senior gave an illustration of what he meant by expansion. Take an electric railway. There are the waiting rooms, where passengers await the train that takes them on. The waiting room may be bare and uninviting or it may be very luxurious but still it remains only a waiting room. Step into the power house. There is the hum of life and stir, the great force is transmitted to all parts of the line. Do we want our Church to be waiting rooms or power houses?

Will Visit Peterboro.

Rev. B. Davies made a few remarks drawing the attention of the people to two splendid articles in The Canadian Baptist, one on Concentration at home and the other on Personal Work. He announced that Mr. Senior would sing a duet with him at the evening service, and that Mr. Senior would also remain over to be with them on Monday evening, when there would be a supper and a social evening for the members and adherents of the church.

Mr. Senior leaves on Tuesday to visit the following places: Peterboro, Lindsay, Fenelon Falls and Wihtby.

During the offertory the choir sang an anthem.

SEAPLANES FOR MAIL LINERS.

Londoner Foresees a Four-Day Service between England and America.

LONDON. — "Within a very reasonable period we shall find all the principal mail liners fitted with seaplanes," asserts D. H. Bernard, editor of the Merchant Service Review. "Considerable time will be saved in the transit of mails. A liner leaving New York with urgent and important letters will be able to discharge them by seaplane 300 to 400 miles west of the Irish coast; within a few hours they can be delivered in London, thus effecting a saving of twenty-four hours.

"The same procedure can be carried out by a vessel bound to New York—weather of course being an important factor—for in fine and settled weather a well-equipped seaplane could travel at an enormous speed over a considerable distance. It is quite within the bounds of possibility that letters posted in London can be delivered in New York within four days."

Says Germany Is Unbeaten

I. F. Marcosson Declares her Soldiers go home as Conquerors.

NEW YORK, December 19. — Isaac F. Marcosson, a writer and lecturer, who has just returned from a six-months' visit to France, Holland and Switzerland, delivered his first lecture here on "The War—and After," at the Advertising Club, 47 East 25th street. He praised the work of General Pershing, and called his being sent to France, as "an inspiritional stroke." General Pershing, he said, had never had a day's business experience in his life, yet he organized and directed the tremendous business system of supplying and equipping our armies until when the armistice was signed there were 2,100,000 American soldiers in France, with four months complete supplies, and equipment in the store houses. In speaking of the economic compensations of the war he said:

"The tragedy of the war is that Germany has not been beaten. The German soldiers are returning home as conquering heroes. They are being greeted as saviours of the German economic system. I believe that Geramny is a great deal better off than she wishes the world to believe. I have visited all the neutral countries of Europe, and have seen the tremendous storehouses owned by the Germans in Holland and in Spain."

He said that he was sorry President Wilson had seen fit to leave his place as the spokesman of humanity, and he believed that his judicial judgment would have had more weight if he had stayed in this country. "But now," he said, "that he has gone I hope that he will see some of teh results of the unspeakable atrocities perpetrated by the Germans and will talk to the men who have been through cruelties which have not been duplicated since the dark ages."

ORIGIN OF THE CHRISTMAS TREE.

There are many beautiful stories associated with the origin of the first Christmas Tree. One legend says that on the holiday night all Nature, even the animals and the trees, were rejoicing, and that the cedars, instead of pointing their branches upward as pointed slender trees, spread their branches wide to protect the mother and her new-born child.

CAVES OF REFUGE.

Scheme to Reduce the Loss of Life in Mine Explosions.

Refuge caves are now being proposed as a means of saving life in coal mines. The idea is to have in each mine one or more caves dug out of the solid coal or rock from one of the main passages of the mine. The entrances to the cave from the main passage way would be a long, narrow tunnel with three or four sets of massive doors, so that the cave would be explosion proof. In times of danger miners who could not get to the surface would go to this cave and shut themselves in.

A considerable proportion of deaths in coal mine disasters is due to the after effects of an explosion rather than to the explosion itself, and often the miners have lived for hours or even days before they suffocated. The caves would serve under similar conditions.

Air would have to be supplied in the caves, and this could be done either by small boreholes to the surface, such as are not uncommon in coal mines, or by pipe lines—built so as to be explosion proof—running through the mine passages. The cave connected with the surface by a borehole could be supplied with air freely and kept in touch with the surface by a telephone, and food could be sent down through the hole.

A cave connected by a conduit through the mine could also have telephonic communication with the surface, but it would be necessary in this case to keep a quantity of concentrated food and some water stored in the chamber. Supplies of medical first aid materials and a pulmotor for reviving miners overcome by gases could also be kept in the cave to advantage.—Saturday Evening Post.

THE WIFE

BY JANE PHELPS

Mrs. Curtis and Ruth Discuss The Woman Question

CHAPTER LXVII.

If Brian occasionally came home and found Ruth out, it annoyed him. For all his bohemianism, it troubled him not to know where Ruth was. He had steadfastly refused to go to the shop, or to call for her on his way up-town.

"I have no desire to be pointed out as "Mrs. Hackett's husband," he said when she asked him to do either.

He often felt uneasy because of his dog-in-the-manger attitude. But, like most men, he would not confess it. He took Mollie King to the Brevort and other places, but he would have been horribly shocked and indignant had Ruth done the same thing.

He was of such a jealous disposition that, had he cause, he would have made both himself and Ruth very unhappy—even had he imagined a cause. But Ruth was so frankly careless of attention from anyone but him, that he could not in decency object to anything she had so far done. Yet as time passed and Ruth told of the little courtesies of her employer — his thoughtfulness of her— Brian commenced to take on an injured air which should have warned her not to be so outspoken as regarded her Arthur Mandel.

Brian scarcely realized yet that he was troubled because of Arthur Mandal. But there was now an ever-present thought — more a feeling, perhaps — that along Ruth's path, daily associated with her, was this man Mandel.

Not that Brian thought Ruth in love with him or that he feared she would be. He had not gone as far as that even in his thoughts. But he was convinced that Mandel was in love with Ruth. That her advances in salary were simply one of his ways of showing it. Regardless of Ruth's explanation as to WHY her pay had been increased, he was positive in his own mind that she did not really EARN fifty dollars a week. It was unbelievable. A girl with no business experience. It was all very well for her to tell him it was because she knew what was indeed to be done to those old houses and to the rooms which the firm redecorated; that might go with some men, not with him. Mandel had been struck with her looks, had hired her, and now was in love ith her.

This was the way Brian figured the raise in Ruth's salary. That her artistic ideas were worth much more than she received, he would not have believed. Neither would it have made any difference in his ideas had he known that since Ruth had worker for him, Arthur Mandel had never once overstepped the boundaries of proper conduct toward her — that of employer and employed.

Ruth often had thought of Mandel's punctiliousness. He seemed always to be interested in her only because of her work. It gave her an easy feling and manner when with him which would have been absolutely impossible to her, had she known his real feelings.

But Arthur Mandel was a patient man. 'Rome wasn't built in a day," he often said to himself when he thought of Ruth.

Ruth had quite naturally been thrown with many wealthy clients of the firm. Men and women who were thoroughly abreast of the times, and who were both entertaining and interesting.

Mrs. Curtis said to her one day, when, as they often did, they were lunching together:

"Those people you have been telling me of are the people you should know socially. They are your kind, I mean it", at a nod of dissent from Ruth. "You were brought up with that sort. You'll never become accustomed to the crowd Mr. Hackett—like so many clever men—affected before he met you. I'm not knocking them. Some of them are immensely clever. But they are too inconventional to please you brought up as you were. And you won't be able to overlook their familiar ways because they have brains."

Ruth knew, down in her heart, that Mrs. Curtis was right. That never would she feel at home with the set to which Claude Beckly and those of his ilk belonged. Yet she was not quite ready to admit that it was so.

"Don't you think it is a wife's duty to make her husband's friends her friends?" she asked. "Especially when he has taken her to live among the people he knows?"

"Well—perhaps, in a way. But I am beginning to think that we women are too ready to give up our ideas, even our individuality, to please our husbands. And I also sometimes wonder if they would not respect us more, even love us better, if we were not quite so slavish in our attitude.—Not you! you are one of the advanced women who do what they like," as Ruth had been about to speak. "It is wonderful. I often think of you, and how brave you are to get up and go to business every day—a woman brought up in luxury.

"It isn't brave at all," Ruth laughingly replied. "It would be real bravery for me to stay at home and do housework. That requires more courage than I possess. You see, I really love my work."

To-morrow— Ruth Is Again Obliged To Go Away. Brian Objects At First.

Geraldine and Lou Tellegen

IF there is anything in the theory of the attraction for opposites, it would certainly seem to have held good in the case of Geraldine Farrar and Lou Tellegen. Both are artists, both are of the theatre, and yet they represent types as nearly opposite in make-up as one could desire. Mr. Tellegen is blond, tall and athletic. Miss Farrar is brunette, of medium height for a woman and non-athletic in habit. And yet both, according to Mrs. Tellegen, and consistent physical culturists and examples of normal and healthful living.

There is between these two, in a very marked degree, the traditional difference between the masculine and, faminine. Mr. Tellegen is devoted to sports and outdoor athletic pastimes while Miss Farrar, in spite of her well set up figure and firm clear-cut outlines, is interested in them not at all. In her screen delineation of Joan of Arc, she gives the suggestion of a sturdy and athletic young woman, pre-eminently capable of fighting the battles of France. But her dramatic work tending to give that impression was, so she says, entirely a matter of spirit. Mrs. Tellegen is not voluntarily an athletic woman, and yet Mr. Tellegen assures me that she is very, very strong, far stronger than the average athletic girl. This is undoubtedly because of her unusual vitality and the splendid physical condition which she maintains by careful and regular habits of life.

Miss Farrar observes every requirement of normal, healthy living such as an abundance of sleep, care in eating, good ventilation and the avoidance of dissipation or excess in any form—even excessive physical exertion. The truth is that Miss Farrar's chief exercise is found in her professional work. She regards singing as the ideal physical training and holds that she secures more oxygen and more bodily benefit during a half hour of singing than the average athlete in his strenuous exertions. Not only does the exercise of singing promote the general circulation and charge the system with oxygen, but the spiritual exaltation associated with the expression of this form of art has in it a definite influence of its own in the quickening of the circulation and the stimulation of the bodily functions. In other words, we may take it that merely as a form of exercise, singing can be recommended to keep one bodily vigorous and in good health.

Miss Farrar holds that to retain a beautiful and faultless voice demands the possession of a body that is in perfect condition from every standpoint. A wonderful voice is a very delicate gift, the kind of a possession that one may have to-day and lose to-morrow. Accordingly one can not afford to become reckless in the custodianship of such a gift.

Miss Farrar's scheme of life is really based upon the teachings of her mother. She was brought up from the beginning to become a singer and her entire system of health care as a child rested upon two things which her mother emphasized as being all important. These two things were her stomach and her voice. She was taught to take care of her digestive system so as to maintain a perfectly balanced state of health, which in turn made possible the maintenance of her voice in a faultless condition.

Mr. Tellegen is reminiscent of the Greek in more ways than one. By birth he is half Greek and half Dutch, but in his bodily outlines he suggests the make-up and spirit of the sculptured ideals of the old classic days. He is an even six feet tall and weighs one hundred and seventy-four pounds, but he has an exceptional breadth of shoulders and fullness of chest that give him a very striking athletic appearance. He has the comparatively small head idealized in many examples of Greek art and this contrast with the breadth of his shoulders gives him that suggestion of the heroic which is found in so many sculptures of both modern and ancient times.

Mr. Tellegen twice won the fencing championship of Europe, but he is a good exponent of swimming, golf, boxing, tumbling and many other athletic pastimes, besides being proficient in sculpture and mechanics.

Mr. Tellegen holds that the ideal exercise is fencing because it is primarily the expression of a quick and active brain and calls for a uniform and equal participation of brain and body. In the same way he holds that the ideal development is one which does not accentuate or over emphasize either brain or body. The two should be represented on a base of "fifty-fifty," as we say in America. This, he says, was the old Greek ideal and we have so far been unable to improve upon the culture of that ancient and classic people. — Physical Culture.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Concerning Dandruff.

Alcohol applied several times a week to the scalp will cure dandruff. If you find that this makes the scalp and hair too dry add six teaspoonfuls of castor oil to one pint of alcohol. No one should neglect curing dandruff once it has appeared. If allowed to continue the hair will become very thin and baldness may result. It is very necessary to keep the scalp clean while it is thus diseased. Dandruff is infectious, so be very careful that no one uses your comb and brush or wears your hat. These are the things that usually spread the disease.

Pruning German Names.

Societies with long names are usually shortened by busy Americans, as with the "Y. M. C. A." and the "I. W. W." which are popularly known by their initials. Germans also are now abbreviating some unduly cumbrous titles. The Allegemeine Luftfahrtzeug-Ausstellung" is popularly known as the "Ala," and now the "Deutsche Ausschuss fur den Mathematischen und Naturwissenschaftlichen Unterricht" has been happily converted into the "Damnu"—which, while perhaps objectionable as to the title of an American society, has no impious connotation to the German Outlook.

Heart Palpitated

Could Count Every Beat

When the heart begins to palpitate it will beat fast for several seconds, then slow, then start to flutter, and a feeling of utter depression will come over your whole system, accompanied by weak, fainting and dizzy spells.

When the heart gets into this condition, you become weak, worn and miserable, and are unable to attend to either social, business or household duties.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will give prompt and permanent relief to all sufferers from any heart weakness or nerve derangements.

Mrs. Walter Greives, Apsley, Ont., writes:—"I had been run down, and doctors told me I was anaemic, but did not help me with their medicines. I could not sleep nights, my heart palpitated so, and I could count every beat.

I used to have such dizzy spells I would have to go to bed. I was not able to do any work for eight months. A cousin of mine had taken Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and told me what they had done for her. I took eight boxes of them, and now I am able to help every day with the work. I am so thankful to tell others what they have done for me, so that they may try this great and wonderful remedy. I hope this may prove good to some one who is suffering the way I did."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c. a box at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

HERALDS HUMAN ENGINEER

Man Who Can Handle Men to be the Executive of the Future

NEW YORK, —At the session of the thirty-ninth annual meeting of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, Dudley R. Kennedy of Philadelphia, employment manager of the American International Shipbuilding Corporation, said the human-engineering phase of the country's industrial development had generally been overlooked.

"We are now entering upon the war after the war," he said. "We glibly discuss the social revolutions growing out of events in Europe, but many people do not seem to see that we are going through a momentous social revolution here and now.

"We hardly yet know what competition means; we will learn it within a few years. Permit me to prophesy that the executive of the next decade will be the man who best knows men. He will be an originator a a handler of men as individuals, a a handler of men in the mass, a leader not a driver, a very human man. The science of human engineering is here to stay. The study of human characteristics is the most enduring, as well as the most fascinating in the world and still the most complex."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Cheating Catherine

By IMES MACDONALD

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The last of her line was Catherine Van Wye, who lived with two maiden aunts in the old colonial mansion that had been the home of the Van Wyes for a hundred and forty years. Stiff and prim had been her upbringing, and not for a single instant had she been permitted to forget that she was a Van Wye—something rarer, something fairer, something so much closer to heaven than any one of the "common people."

After a fashion Catherine was pretty, but a little too slim, a little too wan. Her blood may have been blue, but also it was thin. She was delicate, but Catherine had wealth, was cultured in the ignorance of life as her grandmother had been—this showed in her shy, rather wondering eyes—but she did have one redeeming trait which might save her from a barren life of old-maid gentility—and that trait was curiosity.

The only man Catherine knew who was anywhere near her own age was John, the chauffeur. She used to sit primly behind John in the car and study the back of his well-set head and sturdy shoulders, and wonder about men in general as represented by John. If it had ever occurred to him, John might have encouraged Catherine to think about him in particular. He might have even done this so successfully that she would have eloped with him, for John was a good-looking boy, but he had never once given Catherine a thought. A certain little maid in the stone front over in the next block completely filled John's head and heart. Poor Catherine could never have competed with Adele, the little maid, for Adele had blood-red lips and daring eyes—she was all curves and dash and vitality—and John was mad about her.

However, John's presence always set Catherine's curious mind to wondering about men in general. It wasn't nice, of course, for to wonder about men was quite vulgar, she knew that her aunts had said so. They had impressed upon Catherine that she was a Van Wye and a sacred thing, and she believed it. The idea of a man's even so much as touching her gave her shivers of horror—especially an ordinary man of the People—for the People were terribly common, and Catherine was patrician, very patrician, indeed.

Then one afternoon it so happened that Adele had occupied so much of John's time and thought that he had neglected his job and the car, so much so that that neglected piece of mechanism stalled right on a busy crossing on the avenue. It certainly was embarrassing, for the traffic policeman was as sore as a wounded rhinoceros. He called John a "mutt," and would probably have said worse things than that if it hadn't been for Catherine's patrician presence. But the engine would not start and the traffic was piling up behind them while the traffic regulator became more and more angry.

"Here!" he roared. "Swing her down the middle of the block next the curb!" And as he heaved his massive weight against the back corner of the heavy car one Jim Brand detached himself from the passing throng and joined in pushing the heavy car out of the way.

"You oughta be on the force, with them shoulders." The policeman grinned his thanks to Jim Brand as they rolled the big car up to the curb.

But Jim only laughed and waved his hand in a half salute as the other went back to his job.

"Thank you very much indeed," said Catherine primly as Jim Brand turned to her with his hat in his hand, and her eyes as she sat in the car were almost on a level with his own. His first thought was that she would have been pretty if she had a little more life to her.

"She'll have to go to the garage, miss," offered John meekly.

"I'll get you a taxi," smiled John Brand. He did so, and handed her into it most naturally by taking firm hold of her arm. And no young man had ever before taken hold of Catherine's arm. From the taxi she leaned out and thanked him again, smiling just a little excitedly, for this was an adventure. Then, summoning all her courage, she said: "Were you going downtown? Perhaps I could drop you somewhere."

So Jim Brand got in beside her and they rolled down the avenue, at length stopping in front of Catherine's home.

"I—I was really on my way uptown," confessed Jim Brand, humorously, "but I—wanted to ride with you."

Catherine didn't know what to say to that, so she just looked—and then looked away, wondering if either of her aunts was observing the tableau as she and the strange young man stood there on the walk.

"You're not offended, are you?" he asked.

"I—I should be"—she entered the gate and turned to him for a fleeting instant—"but I'm not!" And with a little laugh she ran up the steps.

The very next Sunday morning quite early Catherine crossed the street to the park opposite the house. The aristocracy of the square only use the park during the early hours, before the rabble of the city fills the benches, so she sat herself down in the early morning sunlight and wondered about Jim Brand, who at that very moment came strolling toward her.

"I hoped I'd find you—aren't you going to ask me to sit down?" Then he sat down anyway. It was quite startling and very exciting. He questioned her and teased her, treated her just as if she weren't a Van Wye and sacred—just as if she were a girl whom he liked.

"Let's walk," he finally said, rising and catching her by the hands to draw her to her feet. He was like that—just sudden and abruptly insistent—it took Catherine's breath completely away. And the color came into her cheeks and lips, and animation to her eyes. She fairly sparkled in response to his vital presence, and she completely forgot herself and her aunts and tradition.

So it went. She met him many times. Apparently by accident, but really by arrangement, although Catherine herself never fully realized this. And suddenly her aunts noticed a change in her. She grew rounder, color became pronounced, her lips were red always and her eyes danced on the slightest pretext. The aunts were perplexed until one evening Catherine was late to dinner. She had been out all afternoon in the car. Jim Brand had given John $5, and they had left John to his own devices while Jim took the wheel, with Catherine in the seat beside him. Together all afternoon they had breezed along through the country recklessly happy. Hence Catherine's lateness to dinner.

At the Van Wye table that night there was less conversation than usual. The aunts were uneasy. Catherine's father had been a little wild in his youth, and the aunts wondered vaguely until Catherine arose from the table with a little smile.

"Aunt Belinda, were you ever grabbed suddenly by a nice young man and hugged close up to his heart and kissed ever so many times right on the mouth before you realized what was happening?"

"Whatever put such notions into your head, Catherine Van Wye? Certainly not!" said Aunt Belinda, severely.

"Then I feel very sorry for you, Aunt Belinda," said Catherine, demurely, "for you have missed something."

"Catherine!" chorused the horrified aunts in despair, but their terrible niece had danced toward the telephone.

And an hour later Jim Brand was playing ragtime on Catherine's piano while that young woman stood behind him and patted the syncopated time on his broad shoulders, occasionally ...ing down to rub her smooth cheek against his, while in the room above those maiden ladies, her aunts, communed in solemn conference.

"And he's just a common country boy who happens to go to college!" said Aunt Melvina.

"I don't see what we can do about it," said Aunt Belinda helplessly; "she's twenty-one and has the Van Wye willfulness!"

And every now and then Catherine Van Wye unexpectedly launches her agile young body like a catapult upon her surprised husband and hugs his head savagely to her breast, murmuring: "And they would have cheated me out of this! Cheated me out of life, and love, and you—you common person!"

But Jim Brand only grins and gives his ardent wife a proper kissing, which vulgar practice, I regret to say, seems to agree with the last of the patrician Van Wyes.

WORDSWORTH'S EARLY HOME

House in English Village of Cockermouth, Where Poet Was Born, Is Still Standing.

Cockermouth is one of those English villages of the lake region where you feel that you would like to spend your declining years in a cottage with the inevitable English ivy and a garden decorated with borders of periwinkle and other old-fashioned flowers. A river following a twisted course through Cockermouth completes the peaceful, back-to-nature atmosphere of the village.

You might easily spend some time in Cockermouth before you discovered that it was Wordsworth's birthplace. The historic home is still standing, the same stolid, substantial British residence where the poet spent the greater part of his boyhood.

The house is decidedly a home for a student of books and not at all the sort which Wordsworth, the nature devotee, would have chosen in which to grow up. The yard and garden, however, make up for the unpoetic gray stone walls. It is a shady yard, surrounded by a low stone fence.

The Wordsworth house is not a shrine for the literati to inspect and write verses of appreciation on the walls, or sign their names in a ledger along with the autographs of famous visitors and tourists. It is a quiet home, as in the poet's day, a home which you would pass a dozen times without suspecting it had been the birthplace of such a famous person.—Chicago Daily News.

Forgotten the Driver.

Mrs. Manager was about to start on a picnic with her family.

"Let me see, here are the wraps, here's the lunch basket, here's the field glass, and here's the bundle of umbrellas. I think we've got everything, and yet— Children we haven't forgotten anything, have we?"

"Shall I get in now, my dear" said her husband, pulling on his driving gloves.

"Why, yes, of course!" beamed Mrs. Manager. "Get in! I knew there was something else!"

A Ball of Twine.

Four years ago the letter carriers in a Cincinnati branch postoffice began to save all the twine on incoming mail instead of throwing it away. A ball was made of all not used on outgoing mail, and this ball now measures twenty-nine inches in diameter and weighs seventy-five pounds. It is estimated that it is at least thirty-five miles in length.

No Luck for Him

This child won't play or smile. He is real sick. His tongue is white, breath feverish, stomach sour. He fears he is in for a dose of awful castor oil, calomel or pills. How he hates them. He would rather remain sick. No! He won't tell mother!

If his mother would only learn the value of candy "Cascarets." How children love this candy cathartic—how surely it acts on liver and bowels.

TO MOTHERS! Each ten cent box of Cascarets contains full directions for dose for children aged one year old and upwards. Nothing else "works" the nasty bile, sour fermentations and constipation poison from the tender little bowels so gently, yet so thoroughly. Even cross, feverish, bilious children gladly take Cascarets without being coaxed. Cascarets taste just like candy. Cascarets never gripe, never sicken, never injure, but above all, they never disappoint the worried mother.

DANDRUFF MAKES HAIR FALL OUT

A small bottle of "Danderine" keeps hair thick, strong, beautiful.

Girls! Try this! Doubles beauty of your hair in a few moments.

Within ten minutes after an application of Danderine you can not find a single trace of dandruff or falling hair and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use, when you see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—growing all over the scalp.

A little Danderine immediately doubles the beauty of your hair. No difference how dull, faded, brittle and scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair taking one small strand at a time. The effect is amazing—your hair will be light fluffy and wavy, and have an appearance of abundance; an incomparable lustre, softness and luxuriance.

Get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine for a few cents at any drug store or toilet counter, and prove that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment—that's all—you surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine.

Old-Time Prodigality.

Among the once necessities of farm life that reflected prodigality in the use of valuable timber was the old rail fence. Like many other almost bygones of rural life, its place in farm wastefulness now is well established, and yet it had its uses for which the present straight-line wire fencing cannot qualify.

The old rail fence's serrated stretches were the home of small animal life that now is rapidly disappearing. Around its timbers there grew the uncultivated blackberry, with its sister the raspberry, and among its recesses there thrived the elder, whose fruit once was coveted for pie material and whose blossoms were the foundation for elderberry wine that matrons served of a winter evening when the neighbors gathered.

The rail fence, with its invariable undergrowth, was the favorite protection for Bob White in winter, and from its top he sang in the warmer seasons. Beneath, the little ground squirrel burrowed. From safe retreat he chattered if some intruder came near to annoy him as he was busily engaged in gathering his store of food for the snow time.

To the harvest hand it afforded protection at the end of the long row for a brief respite, and its corners formed shaded nooks under which the water jug might be kept.

And from what royal timber was this old fence constructed! Black walnut logs, chestnut logs, and the smooth lengths of the ash tree were cleft by numerous rail splitters for the "seven high" fence that stood the storms of decades. There was many a black walnut rail whose timber would make the manufacture of gun stocks chortle with satisfaction had he such a present supply of wood at his command.

The Sword and the Plowshare.

When a returned Ottawa soldier was asked what had surprised him most in the battle zone he promptly replied that he had found a robin's nest in what, before the birds moved in, had been an empty shell-case.

Freak of the Wind.

In Winnipeg, Man., the wind blew so furiously as to tear a freight car from its fastenings and send it along the track at the rate of sixty miles an hour. The car traveled wild for many miles and finally crashed into a passenger train with such force as to be thrown completely on top of the locomotive which it struck.

Lower California's Revolt.

Reports from Lower California are to the effect that it has seceded from Mexico and set up a government of its own. It has an army of 200 men, one gunboat, a train of cars loads with building material and a little money, which is a luxurious beginning for a revolution in that region.—New York World.

The Aeolian-Vocalion

THE WONDERFUL NEW MUSICAL INSTRUMENT—
THE GREATER PHONOGRAPH

FOR A MERRIER CHRISTMAS

THE AEOLIAN-VOCALION is the first great musical instrument constructed upon the phonograph principle. It is different—finer and more wonderful than any other instrument of its kind you have ever heard.

If you like vocal music, the astoundingly perfect reproductions by the Vocalion will thrill you like the original voices of the great singers who have given their art to the record makers. If it is the appealing mellowness of the violin that wins your preferance, or the tremendous chorus of a great orchestra, the Vocalion tone, true to the most delicate inflections and qualities of every voice and instrument, will satisfy as no phonograph music heretofore could have.

When you hear the Vocalion you will hear the supreme achievement in tone reproduction; you will appreciate the highly developed art that the world's greatest music house has been able to employ in making a greater phonograph. The artistic richness of this beautiful phonograph will impress upon you that the making of a fine musical instrument is a task for artistic skill and never possible of accomplishment by the mechanic or scientist alone.

And when you have tried the Graduola—when you have played your favorite records, modulating each tone, varying each measure as you choose, with this remarkable expression device—you will realize that this feature alone grants the Vocalion a distinction and a capacity for musical pleasure-giving unequalled by any other instrument of the phonograph type.

Vocalion prices are $69 to $525 ($150 and up—with the Graduola).

FIGHTING FOR LIBERTY.

Czecho-Slovaks In Canada Are Strongly Organized.

Czecho-Slovaks in Canada are preparing to celebrate the re-establishment of a free Czecho-Slovak nation, after three hundred years of enforced submission to Teutonic rule. There are twenty-four branches of the Czecho-Slovak National Alliance in Canada, with headquarters in Winnipeg. The Canadian president, W. Blaha, has despatched the following telegram to Prof. Masaryk, the first President of the young republic: "The Czecho-Slovak people in Canada are thrilled with great joy in reading the proclamation issued by you to the world announcing the fundamental principles which are to be adopted to govern the present Czecho-Slovak republic. There is a fitting victory for your indomitable spirit, supported by all liberty-loving Czecho-Slovak people the world over."

The activties of the alliance since the outbreak of war, directed to the achievement of their national aims, have been seconded all along with the most earnest effort to give practical assistance to the Allies in the war. Thousands of men of the oppressed nationalities of Southeastern Europe have fought in the Canadian army. August Fibiger, former Canadian president of the alliance, recruited a unit of Czechs in Winnipeg and the West, which went overseas as a company in the 223rd Manitoba Battalion about two years ago. The 225th British Columbia Battalion also contained a number of soldiers of this nationality. Many Czecho-Slovaks have gone overseas from Eastern Canada, and Czechs resident in the United States came to Canada at the financial expense of the alliance to enlist against the Teutonic alliance before the United States came into the war.

The Czecho-Slovak army is in the fifth place numerically with the Allies, fighting on the French, Italian and Macedonian fronts. They form the nucleus of a new Entente force on the Russian front, opposing Bolshevism and German influence in Russia and Siberia. Thousands are in the United States army.

The white and red flag of the Czech people now floats over the historic castle of Hradsin, seat of former Czech kings, in Prague, symbolizing the dawn of freedom from Teutonic rule and oppression which the Czechs have fought against with every means in their power for 300 years.

The No Hat Fad.

The "no hat fashion" which had a rapid rise and a sudden fall in Germany two years ago is again becoming popular, according to an article in Die Made. "The time was," says the paper, "when a hatless man in the street attracted much attention and caused people to speculate as to how and where he could have lost that indispensable part of his attire. Now the man without a hat is recognized as a sartorial hero who subscribes to the theory that the hat is useless except as a promotor of the wigmaker."

POETIC JUSTICE.

Story of Poacher Who Crossed Line Once Too Often.

Charles Dorsch, Black Rock riverman, living in Buffalo, had his second experience with Canadian border officials recently when he and a companion were fined $150 in Bridgeburg Police Court, after they had been captured while illegally shooting ducks just after dawn in a little bay in the lake, half a mile above the Fort Erie ferry dock.

Dorch's first run-in with the Canadians occurred almost four years ago, on Dec. 28, 1914, when he and Walter Smith, of Buffalo, were shot by Canadian soldiers while the Americans were illegally taking ducks in the same little bay above the village. Smith was killed outright and Dorsch spent time in a Buffalo hospital with a bullet in his shoulder.

Dorsch had an opportunity to return a little of the Canadian money that was paid him to the amount of $5,000 by the Canadian Government, which did not want to have a serious difference with a friendly government over a duck-poacher. In addition to the fine, the guns and motor-boat were confiscated.

Dorsch, with Oliver Summer, a pal, have been in Canadian waters considerably lately. They've been accustomed to take their little motor-boat out of its berth before dawn, slip down the harbor and up the river till opposite Fort Erie.

Arriving opposite and a little bit above the Canadian village, they'd shoot across the current, bring up in the weeds on the other shore and string their decoys. It was a fairly good place to pot the mallards when they were flying a couple of weeks ago, and now that the redheads and coot are flying, its a prime place for them.

Of course all this is against the Canadian law, which not only prohibits the shooting of duck without a license but prohibits shooting the wildfowl from a motor-boat. Dorsch and Summer weren't paying any more attention to the Canadian laws than Dorsch and Smith did, back in 1914.

But the Canadians weren't asleep. They have a police chief in Fort Erie now who's a real one. His name is James Edwards and he was a former Royal Northwest Mounted Police officer. He and some of the immigration officers stationed at the ferry dock, including Lieut. J. E. Christopher, late of the Canadian army and the Ypres salient, have had their eye on Messrs. Dorsch and Summer for some time now. They've watched the saucy little motor-boat boiling up the river in the half-light and they've heard the gasoline exhaust come echoing derisively across the face of the water. Two or three times Chief Edwards has hustled into his clothes at the sound of the flouting put-put-put in the early morning and has sneaked down to lie in the weeds in the hope that the duck-poacher would come near enough to the shore for practical purposes.

On a November morning Edwards was awakened by two shots in rapid succession, then a couple more.

"That's me buckos, all right," he said to himself and jumped into his trousers and coat.

Down at the water the familiar scene was revealed. The decoys were bobbing merrily in the water, a flock was disappearing in the distance but right in plain view, and drawn up in shallow water, was the offender from Black Rock with her crew laying quietly below her gunwales, waiting for more redheads.

Edwards lost no time. He charged through the weeds and over the strip of sand.

"Put down those guns," he demanded.

Dorsch and Summer, surprised out of a year's growth, put down two beautiful $50 shotguns and stumbled dazedly to their feet. Edwards clapped on his handcuffs and there were the two poachers — as safe as you please, but looking mighty sickly.

Summer attempted to get rid of a few cartridges in the water, but Edwards blocked that.

"Pick 'em up," he ordered.

"No."

"I say 'yes'—go on, pick 'em up."

Since the request was accompanied by a tightening of wiry fingers around Summer's neck, he reached down in the cold water and picked up the cartridges which helped to incriminate him and Dorsch when they appeared before a yawning magistrate a couple of hours later.

The magistrate who presided at the preliminary hearing given the three Canadian soldiers and Officer Thomas Delaney, in December, 1914, for shooting Dorsch's pal, Smith, fined each of the culprits $15. One hundred dollars was assessed each for entering Canada outside a regular port of entry, and $50 each for shooting the ducks illegally.

Get the Habit of Drinking Hot Water Before Breakfast

Says we can't look or feel right with the system full of poisons.

Millions of folks bathe internally now instead of loading their system with drugs. "What's an inside bath?" you say. Well, it is guaranteed to perform miracles if you could believe these hot water enthusiasts.

There are vast numbers of men and women who, immediately upon arising in the morning, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This is a very excellent health measure. It is intended to flush the stomach, liver, kidneys and the thirty feet of intestines of the previous day's waste, sour bile and indigestible material left over in the body which if not eliminated every day, become food for the millions of bacteria which infest the bowels, the quick result is poisons and toxins which are then absorbed into the blood, causing headache, bilious attacks, foul breath, bad taste, colds, stomach trouble, kidney misery, sleeplessness, impure blood and all sorts of ailments.

People who feel good one day and badly the next, but who simply can not get feeling right are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store. This will cost very little but is sufficient to make anyone a real crank on the subject of internal sanitation.

Just as soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and freshening, so limestone phosphate and hot water act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels. It is vastly more important to bathe on the inside than on the outside, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do.

BE READY FOR EMERGENCIES.

The best way is to always keep a bottle of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine in the house, ready for emergencies. Then when croup or colds come suddenly they can be promptly cured before they have time to reach an acute and dangerous stage. To meet this requirement we have put the syrup up in family size bottles which contain nearly three times as much as the 25-cent bottle and sell at 60 cents.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Nasal Catarrah.

The most common cause of nasal catarrh is chronic inflammation of the nasal mucous membrane. Undoubtedly it affects the general health and absorbs certain nutriment that should go to other parts of the body. Moreover, it affects the other nerves that lie in its region.

Simple remedies are often more efficacious than pretentious ones. Try this: Obtain some boracic acid powder and an ordinary glass nasal douche. Put a teaspoonful of the powder into a pint of hot water. When dissolved thoroughly douche the nose. After this is done sniff a little of the powder itself up each nostril.

This should be done unremittingly night and morning and it will not be long before the wonderful healing powers of the boracic powder will be felt. Only—one must persevere.

HE STRUCK ME.

A man I scarce knew although he had my name,
Came into my office, repeating the same,
And talked for a moment of this and of that;
Remarked that he thought I was putting on fat;
Referred to the weather, repeated a tale
That I laughed at because 'twas exceedingly stale,
And then, when I said, "I am busy today,
Whatever you've come for I wish you would say,"
He struck me!
He struck me!
He struck me without any reason at all.
For a second I staggered and thought I should fall.
This stranger had asked of the health of my wife,
My cousins and aunts, and had picked up my knife
To manicure nicely his finger nails, while
He used up my time in his own breezy style.
But I said, "Make it short; I am busy," and then
He struck me—
Yes, boldly he struck me for ten!

Railway Station Gap Fillers.

New York's Interborough Rapid Transit company has perfected a mechanical gap filling device which will be used at subway stations on a curve. It consists of a grated segment of the platform which is thrust forward, filling the gap between the car and the edge of the platform, the movement being made before the train comes to a stop. The grating remains in this position until the train has started and moved a distance of seven or eight feet. The gap filler is operated by electro-pneumatic cylinder action.

Japan's Earthquakes.

One of the most interesting facts in connection with the recent eruption of Sakurajima, Japan, is that the earthquake shocks were strongly registered in Europe. This is the first time that a volcanic earthquake has been recorded across an entire continent since the horizontal pendulum was adapted for seismographic purposes. Volcanic earthquakes, as a rule, are decidedly local, indicating that the seat of the disturbance is at a very moderate depth in the earth.

EASY TO DARKEN YOUR GRAY HAIR

You Can Bring Back Colour and Lustre With Sage Tea and Sulphur.

When you darken your hair with Sage Tea and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it's done so naturally, so evenly. Preparing this mixture, though, at home is mussy and troublesome. For 50 cents you can buy at any drug store the ready-to-use preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning all gray hair disappears, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully darkened, glossy and luxuriant.

Gray, faded hair, though no disgrace, is a sign of old age, and as we all desire a youthful and attractive appearance, get busy at once with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound and look years younger. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite and not a medicine. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease..

The Brute Again.

Heroes of the Silver Badge Shake Hands With the King

Frenzy and Enthusiasm in Great Hyde Park Display—His Majesty's Eloquent Tribute of Thanks.

LONDON—Hyde Park, scene of revels, tumults, and every form of parade, never saw such a scene as when silver-badge men in a frenzy of loyalty suddenly broke ranks and, crowding around the King, insisted on shaking hands with him.

The King only smiled, and his grip was as firm and true as any of the men to the end of this strange and unexpected ceremony.

Those who could not reach the King rushed to the Prince of Wales, and with face flushed with pleasure and tremendously excited the young Prince met the men gleefully, and shook and shook.

In a great open space in Hyde Park King and people united in doing honour to Britain's heroes. Thousands of men who had won the right to wear the Silver Badge of war service marched in procession to Hyde Park, where, amid scenes of tremendous enthusiasm, they were reviewed by his Majesty. With the King were Queen Mary, Queen Alexandra, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Victoria.

It is doubtful whether such scenes of spontaneous and enthusiastic loyalty have ever been witnessed before. Ere the Royal party had completed the preliminary inspection the ex-soldiers massed on the left flank of the hollow square broke ranks, and crowded round them. King and Queen were lost in the midst of a cheering throng, who pressed past mounted generals and police officers to shake hands with their Majesties.

Splendid Comradeship."

The King had issued a special message to the men. It lost nothing by its simplicity. "As your King I thank you"—it expressed in homely phrase what is in the hearts of the people of Britain, from the monarch on his throne to the humblest subject.

"I am glad to have met you to-day (the message ran), and to have looked into the faces of those who for the defence of Home and Empire were ready to give up their all, and have sacrificed limbs, sight, hearing, and health.

"Your wounds, the most honourable distinction a man can bear, inspire reverence in your fellow-countrymen. May Almighty God mitigate your sufferings, and give you strength to bear them.

"The welfare of the disabled in the war is the first claim on the country's gratitude, and I trust that the wonderful achievements of medical science, combined with the national and voluntarily supported institutions, may assist you to return to civil life as useful and respected citizens.

"I hope that the splendid spirit of comradeship on the battlefield will be kept alive in Peace, and that you may ever occupy a foremost place on all public occasions in the life of your city, borough, town or village.

"As your King I thank you. We all honour you and admire the ungrudging way in which you have done your duty.

"That you may live long, and enjoy with happiness the Peace which you have so hardly won, is the most earnest wish of my heart."

It was a great day. As the huge crowd waited in Hyde Park for the coming of the King enthusiasm ran high. People cheered just because they couldn't help it. Forming three sides of a square, a great mass of men who had fought and won were drawn up on parade ground. They had marched from Chelsea Barracks, through streets of cheering people. Robbed of th martial trappings of military equipment, this great mufti march of the men who had dared seemed more impressive than that of regiments in the full pomp and panoply of war.

Soldiering Not Forgotten

They came in tweeds, and browns, and suits of blue serge, with every variety of headgear. A nondescript crowd, but all possessing the common distinction of the little silver badge on the right lapel of their coats. They had not forgotten their soldiering. The rigours of war had not taken the spirit out of them. In spite of physical disabilities, they marched with a swing and a snap that would not have disgraced the parade ground, and more than one man held his head high over the coveted ribbon of the Victoria Cross. Every man had seen service in the war, either at home or abroad, and had earned an honourable discharge.

They marched on to the parade ground with bands playing; there were bands everywhere. Away behind the trees pipers played "The Minstrel Boy," another band played the "Old Folks at Home," and to the music of the instruments was added the roar of the men's voices as they chorussed out the old war-time songs which have relieved the toil and tedium of many a long march. "Tipperary" they sang ,and the "Long, long trail."

At a quarter to three there was a stir near the big gates. The music stopped the cheering died down. Then with a full-throated roar, the crowd let itself go in a mighty welcome to the King. Hats were thrown in the air, and cheer upon cheer crashed out. The Royal Standard broke bravely from the head of the flagstaff and fluttered radiant in the sunshine.

The King, riding a black horse, came slowly on to the parade ground. Behind him was the Prince of Wales in the uniform of the Royal Fusiliers, and accompanied by the Duke of Connaught. The Queen, Queen Alexandra, and Princess Victoria followed in an open carriage, and mounted staff officers made up the party.

His Majesty had traversed two sides of the open square, and was passing down the left flank, when the mounting enthusiasm of the ex-service men burst all bounds.

Regardless of officers and mounted policemen, they ran forward and thronged round the King. Scores of them pressed forward to shake him by the hand. They stroked the mane of his steed and patted its glossy flanks. It was no use trying to restrain the enthusiasm. It was spontaneous and it defeid all check. His Majesty shook hands cordially and chatted wih the men.

Queen's Carriage Besieged

The Queen's carriage was besieged. Some of the men climbed on the footboard and cheered. Some even clambered into the carriage and gave the Queen the flowers and emblems they carried in their buttonholes. Her Majesty, visibly affected clasped hands with those who surged round. She had to nee both hands as so many were stretched out to her from all sides. "God bless you, my boys," she said, "God bless you."

It was only with difficulty that the men could be dissuaded from taking the horses from the shafts and dragging the carriage round the parade ground themselves.

Meanwhile the Prince of Wales was the centre of similar scenes of enthusiasm. His arm must have ached with the handshaking, but he seemed to enjoy it all. Laughing gaily, he gripped the hands outstretched. One man in his enthusiasm nearly pulled the young Prince from his horse.

The Royal Party split up into three groups, were now completely surrounded, and the unrestrained enthusiasm was beginning to jeopardise the completion of the day's programme. From the reserved enclosure all that one could see of the Royal group were the military caps of the officers in attendance and the cockades on the hats of the Queen's coachmen.

"Digging Out" The King.

In an endeavour to restore some sort of order, instructions were given to a posse of mounted police, who cantered across the ground towards the spot where the King and Queen had disappeared. Breaking their way through, they literally dug their Majesties from the heart of the vociferous crowd, and escorted them back to the saluting base. Even then excited men rushed forward, eager for more handshaking and Sir George Holford, Colonel of the 1st Life Guards, jumped from his charger and took up his position on the step of the Royal carriage in order to act as a bodyguard. That, however, was not sufficient to stop the onrush, and it was not until a couple of squadrons of cavalry were called up that order was restored.

Then the grand march past commenced to the music of the massed band of the Brigade of Guards. Wounded men, unable to march, led the way in a long string of motor vehicles, and behind them were the blinded heroes from St. Dunstan's led by Captain Towse, the blind V.C. who gave the "Eyes left" as the men trooped past.

The men cheered as they marched, and the massed band played "Soldiers of the King," and "Boys of the Bulldog Breed."

WOMEN CANDIDATES

For the first time in the history of Peterboro women candidates will be in the field at the coming elections for the Board of Education. It is practically certain that on Monday, Mrs. W. R. Morris and Mrs. Arthur Stevenson will be nominated as aspirants for positions on the Board. Their entrance into the race should be welcomed as a sign of progress. Women have proved themselves most useful members of the Toronto School Board and there is every reason to believe that the two ladies Council of Women lected by the local Council of Women as candidates would bring business ability and shrewdness to the deliberators at the Peterboro Board of Education. They have been leaders in the splendid work carried on by the local Women's Council, the Playgrounds Association and other similar bodies in whose activities they have played a most useful part. Women should be especially interested in matters of education and the candidature will undoubtedly appeal strongly to the electorate.

MEMORIALS

There are movements in many quarters looking towards the erection of monuments to mark Canada's part in the war. In Ottawa and Montreal there are cries for the construction of great public halls. Strange to say it seems to be assumed in the capital city that such a monument wil be constructed at the expenses, largely if not wholly, of Dominion treasury. Writers in the Ottawa journals warmly condemn the idea of anything in the ordinary monumental line, and urge that something useful be provided, a great music hall preferaby, or an hospital.

In all parts of Canada there will be a desire to erect structures which will remind future generations of Canada's part in the great war, of men who fought and the men who died for the cause of freedom. Scores, nay hundreds, of such monuments be rtaised in Canada in the next few years. A well-equipped hospital for the treatmet of the sick is a form of memorial that will be widely approved. Something, perhaps, can be said, too, for great public halls designed to encourage the cultivation of music and to provide larger accomodation for important public gatherings. Such buildings as Massey Hall in Toronto are certainly of much value in a large community. Several of our larger cities, Montreal included, are in need of suech accomodation But both hospitals and music halls are neccessarily almost local in their character. The cities which desire their monuments to take these shapes should expect to pay for them, either by civic grant or by private subscription. The proposal, gravely made by some Ottawa writers, that the Dominion Government should provide the bill. Perhaps some other kind of institution, not local in its character, may be found possible. But while in the case of local monuments the practical and useful may be insisted on, at the capital there is no reason why, at the proper time, the artistic talent aged to offer suggestions and designs. —Journal of Commerce.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Let us see—wasn't it Kipling who wrote something about "The Lady of the Snows."

The United Farmers say the tariff question will be fought to a finish—the finish of Union Government is undoubtedly what they have in mind.

"We were bribed with promises of exemption, which were repudiated as soon as votes were secured,"—so declares President R. H. Halbert of the United Farmers. So far there has been no official denial of the charge.

There will be no use in talking about increasing the efficiency of the City Council if the right material is not placed in the field, Monday night supply the answer.

The United Farmers have a slogan at their convention. "Let the Silent Man be Heard," the invitation has no significance for Mr. J. H. Burnham, M. P.

Sunday School Lesson Questions

Dec. 22, 1918.

The Birth of Jesus. (Christmas Lesson.) Luke 2:8-20.

Golden Text. There is born to-you this day in the city of David a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord. Luke 2:11.

1. Verses 8-10. How much did God have to do with this visit of Joseph and Mary to Bethlehem at this particular time?
2. Joseph and Mary went to Bethlehem at the command of Caesar Augustus; Joseph, the son of Jacob, was dragged into Egypt as a slave, but the results in each case were most blessed. Now, how can you show that these, and other similar cases, demonstrate that God uses bad men and calamities, as well as good men and fortunate events, to help every devout man to his glorious destiny?
3. What has the birth of Christ meant to the world?
4. Verses 8-10. What significance is there to the poor, and to the toiling masses, that Jesus was born in a stable, and cradled in a manger?
5. These shepherds received a great revelation while looking after their sheep; when do good men get most of their revelation ,or inspirations;—while they are praying for them, or when faithfully engaged in their usual occupations?
6. Why were these shepherds so much afraid?
7. Verses 8-10. Is it usual for people to be afraid when God visits them? Why?
8. Are all God's messages to good people, "good tidings of great joy"? Give your reasons.
7. With what kind of voice did this angel speak; would it be outward and audible, so any person could hear, or an inward voice only?
10. Verses 11-15. In what sense, or how many senses, did the angel mean that Jesus was a Saviour?
11. Why were the citizens of heaven so greatly pleased, and exultant, over the birth of Jesus?
12. How far do you think heaven is from the earth, and do you think that those who are there know what is taking place here?
13. Verses 11-15. To what extent as an accomplished fact, has the birth of Christ brought about peace and good will on the earth? (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by members of the club.)
14. Is it always safe for us to follow supernatural intimations,as these shepherds did? Give your reasons.
15. Verses 16-20. When we start on a journey, or commence a work, on the suggestion of the voice of God in our souls, do we invariably find the results as they were intimated, as these shepherds did?
16. Verses 16-20. Is jubilant joy the constant experience of those who live near enough to God to hear his voice, and are faithful enough to always obey? Give your reasons.
17. Why should we, or not, cultivate a spirit of conscious joy?
18. Does joy unfit, or make us more fit, for business and the other duties of life and why?

Munich Appears Much Gayer

Streets Draped With Flags and Food Is Now Less Scarce.

MUNICH.—Munich looks much less changed after four years of war than those who knew it would have thought possible. The city appears far livelier and gayer than two and a half or three years ago, when the correspondent visited it. Part of this impression is unquestionably due to the profusion of Bavarian-German flags everywhere, among which are the red banners of the Socialists.

Although fairly dark in the evening, because coal must be saved, the streets are crowded during the early hours. Restaurants are open and a fairly palatable imitation of beer is served.

It is in minor details that changes are most apparent at first glance. For instance, even many of the larger restaurants and prominent hotels have paper napkins and paper tablecloths as well. Every postage stamp one licks has a strange, disagreeable taste because a shortage of something has led to the introduction of a substitute for the time-honoured "stickum."

Many stores which formerly proudly displayed signs proclaiming that they were purveyors to Bavarian royalty have erased the words, but the work generally has been done so ineffectually that the words stare out from beneath coats of black paint. Bicycle tires long ago disappeared and have been replaced by coils of steel.

The streets are as clean as ever and the stores as beautiful, though filled with articles the prices of which would have been unbelievable four years ago. Food apparently is obtainable easily in restaurants, though expensive. The suffering seems to fall heavily on the poor people.

Food is now more plentiful than a month ago, before the signing of the armistice brought out stocks which had been held in reserve. The people are perhaps paler than their wont, but the street crowds appear to be warmly dressed and give no sign of suffering.

The most interesting feature of Munich, as every other German city to-day, is the new status of the common soldier. He may be frequently seen riding in automobiles, while officers walk. He never salutes his former superiors.

The city has resumed dancing, which has occasioned a terrific editorial outburst from a portion of the press.

STUDY OF MUSIC MAKES CHILDREN THINK BETTER.

Educators, legislators must be told, and shown if necessary, that in schools where the music is good, there is good discipline and order, the children are more hopeful, more happy. Call it cause or effect, it all goes together. They must see the social, aesthetic and moral values of music. Superintendents and school boards must be made to see that the study of music employs the finest kind of thinking—accurate and right thinking at the right time—concentration, poise — enabling the child to think better in all subjects.

There are a large number of teachers instructing classes in music who have no right to teach it, having no inspiration or even interest to bring to it. They are forced to teach it by short sighted officials, to the incalculable loss to the community—unjust to teacher and pupil.

This movement will give music a standing as an educative factor that it has never had. We shall work out a programme and put the study in its rightful place, overcoming conservatism.

ONE END OF A TELEPHONE CONVERSATION.

"Hello! Is that main 7796? Well, this is———oh, wrong number, I'm sorry."

A minute later. "Hello! Hello! Is that main 7796? Is that Mr. Treble, the music teacher?

"Well, this is a Piano speaking. I live at 137 Queen St., Mr. Treble and I'm so unhappy. I want you to help me. Most pianos live in happy homes and are well treated, but I'm not. There is a boy Fred here. He puts a little alarm clock with scratchy feet on my beautiful mahogany case to make sure he will not practice a minute over the half hour, he is supposed to put in night and morning. And also he slights me. He takes more interest in his baseball bat than he takes in me and I am worth a hundred dollars to every penny his old bat cost.

"Then there's his sister Marguerite. She gets mad when she misses a sharp or a flat and says mean things about me as if I could help it. Still I could put up with the children, because after all they really don't mean to hurt me or my feelings; but the father and mother are even worse. The children often play on my keys after eating bread and jam and mother never takes the trouble to clean the dirty sticky spots off with a damp rag. And the father, he begrudges the small cost of having me tuned. He lets me go for two or three years without any attention until my nerves just all play out. Then I'm so tinpanny he is shamed into getting the piano doctor to tend to me. He thinks that in a temperature varying from 103 in the shade in the summer to 20 below zero in the winter, I can stay in the same room, often without any heat, and not have my health affected by it."

"Now, Mr. Treble, you may know of some home where I would be more welcome and more appreciated. I know many pianos who were made in the factory the same time as I was, and who are in nice homes and well taken care of. Please do this for me and I'll be grateful to you as long as I live.

"Yes, I know you would. You understand.———

"Oh, dear that central girl has cut us off."

MATTERS MUSICAL,

BRANCHING OUT IN ORCHESTRA PLAYING.

A young drummer who wished to improve himself in order that his services would become valuable asked an experienced leader what other instrument he would advise taking up in addition to the drums. The query elicited this response; "In orchestra, the piano is entitled to your first consideration, as it is the most used instrument, and its study forms the foundation of a musical education.

"But if you wish to master an instrument with less competition when you attempt to sell your services, I should suggest the cornet, trombone or 'cello for an alternate instrument. For jazz playing the tenor banjo and saxophone are the two best possibilities, while if you intend to locate in a large centre where there are chances for a musician in the higher grades of playing, I should suggest the oboe, French horn, bassoon or bass clarinet.

"I strongly suggest that you perfect yourself first on the instruments you now play, as ordinarily there are more opportunities for the highly trained player on a single instrument than for a mediocre player on several. This is the age of specialization and competition is keen, much too keen to side-track yourself and allow others to run away with the choice engagements."

"ME NOT MUCH GOOD ON DE SING, BUT....."

In the stories about work among the foreigners within our gates, depicting the methods of assimilating these peoples nationally, there are no more interesting chapters than those that tell of the peculiar power of music. The average emigrant has musical desires that leave us native-born Canadians no room for boasting. He responds to music readily. His children get our national view-point from singing the patriotic and national songs in the schools. To reach the parents, some communities are using the school and love of music as the keys to the situation.

For example in one city the welfare workers have invited the pupils of a down-town school to come once a week and bring their fathers and mothers for a sing. The undertaking was approved and directly aided by the Board of Trade, the Rotary Club and other similar organizations which entirely warded off any criticism that the backers of the scheme were mere fadists. Soon the sing in one school was attended by representatives of 272 families. To further enlarge the attendance a prize was offered to the room whose pupils would bring the most parents. One middle-aged Bohemian father came the next week bringing his violin. He said to the teacher "me not much good on de sing, but maybe my fiddle help"; and this parent, who came to help his boy's room win the prize, was the starting of a parents' orchestra. In utilizing music to Canadianize our foreign population we have hardly yet begun to scratch the surface.

IF MUSICIANS WERE BUSINESS MEN

In a certain city there is an association of business men who meet for an expensive hotel luncheon once a month where they discuss art, war, business and ethics—and, to their own satisfaction settle many questions. For years they have had on the program committee a persuasive doctor who would not dream of giving his own professional services free to any one, and yet who goes about from studio to studio and from one young artist to another asking them to appear before the club (at noonday) without any fee whatever, "because," forsooth, they thus have "opportunity to make themselves known to the public in a very direct as well as refined way, and will get a good luncheon besides."

And, amateur and professional alike receive the same applause, the same perfunctory encore, the same stereotyped "thank you," and, alike, they are promptly dismissed from the club mind, excepting for one fact that their names are well enough remembered that the club always wants some "different" the next time.

Having cited ihts illustration in the course of a paper read at a recent music festival, the editor of Music News proceeded to put the musician's services in its proper light. His logical argument boiled down is this. The public will aways grab eagerly for the "free" thing—be it what it may—but just as certainly it never appreciates the articles. Only that which is bought and paid for has value. When a singer has been heard for nothing he becomes of no value to the particular group which has so heard him and rates him ever afterward at his own valuation, i.e., "nothing."

"My artist," said a manager to me, "was asked to sing for a certain club for nothing and they tried to bribe me by saying that members of thirty-three other clubs would be present who would be certain to want to engage madame later."

"That," said I, "constitutes just thirty-three reasons for my decided refusal, for, if there is anything certain under the sun it is that the ladies of your club, having secured my singer for nothing, will glory in telling all the others of the fact, and no matter how well she may sing or how she may be liked, the afternoon will result in nothing else than the fact that she will have thirty-three other offers of a free appearance.

"No," he continued, "I prefer to wait for the chance of one pay engagement rather than to make sure of offer of thirty-three free ones. At present your own club really wishes my singer; you must, therefore, pay her price, and that money, in hand is worth more than all the prospects in kingdom come."

It is one of the most regrettable facts in the social world to-day that musicians are considered so lacking in self appreciation, their work is held so cheaply, that every sort of individual or organization feel perfectly privileged to ask for their services without considering at all the financial side of the question.

It is no breach of confidence nor any folly of the imagination to say at this time that musicians have suffered financially very greatly since the very beginning of the war. And while it may be contended with a very fair show of reason that this was (1) because of a stringency of money matters and a desire for retrenchments affecting first of all, of course, music and (2) because of the fact that the public mind was not, in the early months of the war in a music receptive condition, it must be confessed also that the whole situation is but the logical outgrowth of a condition which has too long existed and which, unless corrected, will keep the music professian just where it is now in so far as business advancement or money success is concerned.

In a word, the music profession lacks commercialism and needs to make a careful study of the word and of its specific application to music.

JUST FOR THE FUN OF IT.

"Why have you made music your hobby?" asked a friend of a prominent business man in the course of a chat over personal things. "Just for the fun of it," replied the man of affairs. "I find that I can get far more joy out of music than I possibly could out of almost any other thing. To me it is both a physical and a mental refreshment. It seems infinitely more interesting to me than collecting old and broken-down furniture, cracked plates, mutilated coins, antique postage stamps, ancient armour raising chickens or even dogs. Gardening appeals to me as does nature to everyone, but one can only garden a few months out of the year, while one may have music every month of the year. Of course one may study art at all times, but my love is for music. Music seems to me such a living thing that it vivifies everything it reaches. I don't know of anything that could balance the work-a-day strain of the busy man better than music. A half an hour at the piano when I go home simply wipes out everything that has bothered me during the day and gives the mind and body a fresh start as nothing else can. One cannot play any instrument, and play it well, while thinking about anything else."

SAVING COAL WITH PEAT

has long been a familiar fuel in ain parts of the world; but little been done toward preparing it use on a commercial scale, al- gh machinery for grinding it, g it, and moulding it into briq- s was on the market and in use e United States half a century

When coal is plentiful and , peat is forg tten, but in emer- s like the present it is worth e thinking about. The Canadian rament, which owns large peat s, has been experimenting on its aration for use as a fuel on the scale as coal, and the results described by a writer in Railway Locomotive Engineering (New , November). The writer re- s us that peat, in its natural , contains about 10 per cent. of stible matter and 90 per cent. r. The removal of this water stitutes the problem that must olved by the peat engineer; and read:

he Dominion Government owns rge peat bog at Alfred, Ont., where exhaustive experiments were conducted some years ago, and about 3,000 tons of standard peat fuel were manufactured and sold to the householders in Ottawa and neighboring municipalities. The bog was then turned over to a private company for further development, but the company spent all of its money in getting ready to operate, and had no capital left to carry on the enterprise and its plant was junked.

"The results of the manufacturing operations conducted at Alfred indicate that with strict business management, peat could be manufactured for $1.70 per ton in the field.....

"Not more than 120 sun-drying days per annum can be depended upon in Ontario in the manufacture of peat, and as solar energy is the only known form of energy that is cheap enough to be economical in the manufacture of peat, therefore the material has to be laid out in the sun to dry after it has been excavated from the bog, and the minimum period under the most favorable drying conditions is about thirty days.

"When the committee was appointed last spring, its first task was to design a modern machine. Mr. Ernest V. Moore, of Montreal and of Peterboro, was engaged as consulting engineer to design two plants; one of these will be similar to the one he already built at Alfred, but redesigned in the light of the experience obtained there. The other is an entirely new design, which, if successful, will no doubt prove a distinct step forward in the manufacture of machine made fuel. It includes bucket excavators, a very efficient macerator, conveyors for laying the material in the field, spreaders, markers, and mechanical harvesters. An industrial railroad system will gridiron the bog and little cars will carry the material to the railroad, and when the peat is dried, harvest it into a pile, and altogether it will be more simple and less costly per ton of output than any peat plant known.—Literary Digest.

NEW FIELD FOR TRADE

FRANCE WILL WANT GOODS FROM DOMINION.

The Great European Republic Has Been Deeply Moved By the Co-operation of Our Country In Winning the War, and Business Relationships Are Bound to Become Much Closer In the Future.

WITH Canada entering the period of reconstruction when war industries must be readapted to peace activities and new trade secured, it is encouraging to note the possibilities of greatly improved commercial relations with France. At the recent meeting of the Canadian Reconstruction Association at Montreal, Senator Beaubien emphasized the desire of the republic for increased trade with the Dominion. "Deeply moved by Canada's effective co-operation in the war," he said, "France seems anxious to show her appreciation of our efforts. Inspired by that desire, the Comite Franco-Amerique, which is presided over by Monsieur Gabriel Hanotaux, and whose principal object is to extend to the fields of industry the close relations now welding Canada and France on the fields of battle, has called the attention of its Canadian section to the great trade opportunity afforded in reconstruction work necessary to restore the devastated areas of France. It points out that many nations are already eagerly seizing this opportunity and strongly urges Canada to do likewise." The Canadian section of the Comite Franco-Amerique has already recommended to the Government that an honorary commission, assisted by experts if necessary, be appointed to ascertain what Canadian products could be furnished for the work of reconstruction in France, particularly such products as can be standardized and provided in large quantities. The Canadian Association further suggested that this commission should negotiate with the French Government "with a view of having France, as a nation, purchase large quantities of such standardized products with the understanding that the orders for such materials would be handled by Canada in the same manner and through the same channels as war orders."

In supporting measures for greater trade with France, Senator Beaubien submitted some striking figures of our present exportation to prove that large orders can be secured from the republic. Within the last two years orders have been placed in Canada for very large amounts of metallurgical products. One enquiry received by a consulting engineer in Montreal was for no less than 250,000 miles of cable exceeding in price $10,000,000. Tremendous quantities of material are required by the French state railways, including:

Wheels for locomotives,
Wheels for freight and passenger cars.
Straight axles for locomotives, freight and passenger cars.
Bent axles for locomotives.
Locomotive steam cylinders.
Cast steel lubricating boxes.
Cast iron lubricating boxes.
Iron, brass and bronze castings.
Round, flat and square steel bars.
Steel castings.
Steel billets, spring steel.
Helicoidal and spiral springs.
Steel shapes.
Spikes, cut and wire nails.
Iron fittings, spare parts for freight and passenger cars.
Copper and steel fire-box plates.
Rails, bars and splices.
Traction chains and hooks.
Drawn and seamless steel, copper and brass tubes.

During September enquiries were received at the French Chamber of Commerce for shoes, hardware, lumber, foodstuffs, canned goods, prepared furs, glassware for electric light, lard, bacon and smoked ham, toys, maple syrup and tree felling and cutting machines.

The present demand for window sashes and doors alone in the devastated areas in France would supply a splendid market for Canadian factories, but as Senator Beaubien pointed out, prior to the war and even up to two years ago, the major part of ready-made wooden doors sold on the Canadian market were manufactured in the States; most of them came from the middle west, many even from the State of Washington. A substantial proportion were made out of Canadian lumber. In other words, American doors dominated the Canadian market despite the fact that these articles had to bear the extra cost of long railway haul and of Canadian duty which alone added practically one-third to their cost price. The reason for such an extraordinary state of things Senator Beaubien declared was the failure of Canadian manufacturers to standardize their products. As he said, "with their enormous markets the Americans can specialize in one product and by producing enormous quantities reduce cost price to a minimum." Standardization is one of the outstanding features of British and American trade preparations. The question should be given the earnest consideration of Canadian manufacturers.

Gruesome Curiosity.

Mr. James Irving, of Renfrew, while employed by the Colonial Lumber Co. at a small northern lake camp, recently picked up on the shore an old-fashioned boot containing a decomposed foot and part of a man's leg. The sock was still on the long-dead foot.

Booming the Perfume Trade.

Vilhjalmur Stefansson, the northern explorer and scientist, is coaxing the Canadian Government to encourage development of the Arctic islands he has recently added to the Dominion, especially by the raising of musk ox thereon.

There are women who put on airs because that is about all they have handy to put on.

British Submarine Crews Quick to Master Surrendered Craft.

HARWICH, England, Dec. 19.—The business of actually accepting the Germany submarines in surrender was performed by officers and men of the British submarine force who for more than four years had maintained a tedious but relentless watch of waters of the British Isles. An Admiral in a light cruiser commanded the fleet to which the U-boats surrendered, but it was a submarine officer who first stepped aboard each submarine, curtly went through with the brief formalities, and it was a crew of men who had fought the U-boats by underwater methods that manned it and took it to port.

Although British submarines always were on the lookout for U-boats their success in the war was not measured by the number they destroyed. Nevertheless it was coincident that twenty U-boats should have been sunk by British submersibles in the war, and it was the same number first surrendered to the British submarine crews on the day the taking over of the German fleet began off this port.

As far as possible the Admiralty distributed the honour of taking over the U-boats among all the men of the submarine flotilla. Fourteen men were placed on each surrendered boat, and as they surrendered in batches of twenty, a total of 280 officers and men weer allowed to participate each day. Every man looked forward to it eagerly, all of them wanted to be selected for the first day's work, but when they boarded the beaten craft they maintained excellent discipline and orders against any demonstration were so carefully obeyed that it was almost with an air of disinterest that they went about their duties.

So much has been said of the intricacies of the German submarine that there were many misgivings among the British officers of their ability to navigate them soon after they had received them. They were soon reassured, however, as nothing far different from other submarines was found. Among the first twenty brought in was the U-135, which is 276 feet long, was completed three months ago, and had never been to sea until she crossed the British Channel to be surrendered.

Her type attracted Commodore S. S. Hall, who has been at the head of the British submarine force since the beginning of hostilities. He was taken to the vessel soon after she was placed in her berth in the River Stour, and inspected her with the young lieutenant who had taken her over and brought her into port with the aid of the German engineers.

PEACE ON EARTH.

Ring, ring ye bells a joyous strain,
The glad evangel tell again,
That once angelic mistrels told
To humble shepherds on the wold.

Caroling in their rapturous flight,
To God be glory, in the height,
Softly the notes benison flow,
Peace, and good will to men below.

Never, since first, that blest refrain,
Floated o'er Judea's plan,
Has earth, long worn with strife and wrong,
More gladly heard that solace song

Glory to God, supreme, who reigns,
And righteous peace for us ordains,
Welcome, albeit on blood-stained wings
Sweet dove, the olive branch, that brings.

Peace, peace on earth, oh let that song
Triumphant roll the spheres along,
Joy to the world, the war is done,
And smiling peace, her course begun.

Good will to men, on mortal ear,
Ne'er fell those strains with happier cheer,
Proclaiming night's dark gloom withdrawn,
And bright our skies, with hope's fair dawn.

Then jubilant bells, chime and ring,
And far and wide your music fling,
Glory to God in heaven above,
On earth, good will, and peace and love.

KNOWS HORSE IN BATTLE

Soldier Stops in Fighting in France to Look at Nag He Formerly owned

The world is small, after all. Attest: Corp. Arthur Spellbring, an American soldier from Clinton, Illinois. He was going "over the top" in one of the famous American drives and suddenly halted amid the din of bursting shrapnel and booming guns, His attention cetred on a horse.

"There's my old nag I used to own back in the States."

Spellbring recognized it by certain marks on theleft hind foot. In a letter to friends in Clinton telling themof the meeting he wrote: "As soon as this man's war is over, if that horse and I come out unscathed, I'm going to buy him and we'll both go back home together. He'll have a home as long as I have one."

$300 RING GIVEN FOR KISS IS FATAL FOR YOUNG BURGLAR

When Arrested He Admits Robbing Forty Brooklyn Flats.

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—Armand Chamberlain, a 15-year-old boy, who with George Reid, also 15 years of age has confessed to the robbery of more than forty flats in Brooklyn declared in Brooklyn Children's Court to-day that only the "squealing" of a girl whom he had jilted after giving her a $300 ring in exchange for a kiss, prevented him from "getting away as clean as a whistle." The police have recovered $6,000 worth of jewelry from a room occupied by the boys, and are seeking to connect them with other robberies aggregating $20,000.

DRUG TRAFFIC IN LONDON

LONDON, Dec 18.—Disclosures concerning the extent of the drug traffic in London, which were made at the inquest into the death of Billie Carlteon, a popular actress, had a sensational sequel when the police arrested Lo Ping You, a Chinese, and his English wife for conducting the business of supplying opium, and at whose house orgies have been occurring.

CURED OF DYSPEPSIA
BY USING
BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS

The symptoms of dyspepsia are so numerous and diversified in different individuals that probably no description could exactly represent them as they occur in any given case, but a few of the most prominent are a rising and souring of food, pain, flatulence and distention of the abdomen, a sensation of discomfort after every meal, which is sometimes followed by sickness and vomiting.

To get rid of dyspepsia a careful arrangement of the diet is necessary and due time must be given for the digestion of the meal.

You will find that Burdock Blood Bitters will help with this digestion. It does this by toning up the stomach in such a way that the dyspepsia soon disappears.

Mr. Robt. Baldwin, Winnifred, Alta., writes:—"I cannot speak too highly of Burdock Blood Bitters for curing dyspepsia, of which I have been a sufferer for years. I have tried a good many doctors and proprietary medicines, so one day I thought I would try something different. I got a bottle of B. B. B. from our local store, as it was about the only remedy he kept, and I can certainly say that I was more than pleased with the results, as I got better right away. I will always recommend it to other sufferers."

The Welfare of the Children is the Supreme Consideration With the Children's Aid Society

At the annual meeting of the Children's Aid Society held last week the appended financial report was received, also the report of Mr. Joseph Wearing, secretary and solicitor of the Society who at the time of the meeting in question was unable to be present owing to illness. Mr. Wearing's report follows:

Children's Aid Society of Peterborough City and County:

I beg leave to present the following report for the year 1918:

The work of the Society during the past year has been in all respects eminently satisfactory. The aim of the Society throughout the year has been to endeavour to improve conditions wherever possible and only as a last resort to remove children from any home. The agent, Mr. Powell, is particularly well fitted for this kind of work, and he has been able in a number of cases during the year to work harmoniously with parents and to bring about a better condition in homes where children have been neglected. Where conditions have warranted it, however, the Society has not hesitated to remove children to the Shelter feeling that in all cases the welfare of the children must be the supreme consideration. No application to make children wards of the Society have been refused, the Society only taking action where the evidence is convincingly clear that the children have been badly neglected and that there seems no possibility of the home conditions being improved. The aim of the Society is to prevent any children in any home in either the City or the County of Peterborough being neglected.

Mrs. Read's Work.

A number of children have been kept at the Shelter during the year because of the fact that the fathers of the children are overseas and the mothers so situated that they were unable to care for the children. It has seemed well to the Society to so arrange matters at the Shelter that children whose fathers are overseas should be properly cared for in their absence. The work of the Matron, Mrs. Read, is most commendable and any visitors of the Shelter are cordially welcome at any time. The Society would be glad if the public would visit the Shelter occasionally so that they might see for themselves the good work being done there.

A very great deal of credit is due to the two or three ladies who see to it that the children in the Shelter are properly provided with clothing. These ladies visit the Shelter every week and put in a great deal of time sewing and otherwise providing for the children. It seems hardly fair that this work should be left to the two or three who are so faithful in their services. I would submit that each Church in the City should have a representative appointed who would take her turn in visiting the Shelter and helping to do the work necessary there for the children.

Doctors Commended.

The work of Dr. D. C. King in giving free attendance and medicine to the wards of the Society at the Shelter calls for the highest commendation. Dr. J. E. Middleton has also been particularly generous throughout the year in giving free dental attendances for the wards of the Shelter. In closing I wish to personally thank Mr. E. A. Peck, the President, and Father Phelan, the Vice-President, for their assistance to me throughout the year in advising as to the different problems that arise from time to time. All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOSEPH WEARING,
Secretary and Solicitor.

LEAVES TO VISIT ENGLAND

Thousands of Our Troops in France Likely to Make Trip.

LONDON, Thousands of American soldiers in France probably will receive leave to come to England with their transportation expense to places in the United Kingdom being paid. In answer to a query of the American authorities in France if the men could be cared for in England American army headquarters here has replied affirmatively.

The men will have seven days, dating from the time of their arrival in England. Up to this time the only American soldiers who have come to England have been those of the two divisions brigaded with the British armies in France. Since these divisions rejoined the American armies, only a few men have been permitted to come to England.

U.S. Traders Are Flooding West

Expect to Be Favoured by Tariff Action by Dominion Government.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 18.—United States manufacturers are flooding western Canada just at present with their representatives, who openly assert that they expect such favorable action on the tariff by the Ottawa Government in the near future as to enable them to largely increase their business on the prairies. The action of the Agricultural Council and the Grain Growers in declaring at the recent Winnipeg conference for practical free trade with the United States has encouraged the American agencies investigating the western Canadian trade in this belief.

Western boards of trade are not alarmed over this prospect, but it is attracting a good deal of attention in Winnipeg, Regina, Saskatoon and Calgary. The subject has unquestionably contributed to the political unrest through the prairie provinces The farmers are frankly in politics west of the lakes to enforce the old reciprocity pact if they can wield sufficient power, and some Conservative business men are displaying alarm. They think a large immigration from United States is likely next spring and they are inclined to the opinion that this will have a tendency to assist the agrarian campaign now developing here toward a closer trade union with the States.

The international labor organizations are also promoting this same idea. For instance the United Mine Workers of America, are strong in Western Canada. Their headquarters are at Butte Mont., and they have a membership of 8000 in the Alberta and eastern British Columbia field. They are affiliated with the United Trades Confederation on this side of the line. A thoughtful element among businss m blivhrdl op upu pudw dw business men believe the eastern manufacturers, with large financial inteersts, should pay more attention to this very subject and examine it from every angle.

The West, of course, split on the reciprocity issue of 1911, and by energetic efforts western public men believe the result would be the same in the event of an election to-morrow but the grain growers are better organized today than in 1911, and more capable of impressing their views on the electorate than at that time. It has been openly stated here that manufacturers in the United States may easily be induced to finance those interests in the west which are raising the cry of less restrictions on trade with the States.

BOLSHEVIKISM.

Sir,— The Bolshevikist maintains that the affairs of the world have been run on incorrect principles. He says that both God and man (except himself) have failed, that nature is not the work of God but of Satan, that man has developed class interests, and that the final solution lies in a correction of the freedom of individual action allowed bw nature and its God and that allowed to class interests and combinations. The Bolshevikist proposes to compel goodness on the observance of what he, not God, has chosen as the destiny of man. The W. C.T.U. curses the inventor and user of tobacco and alcohol. The inventor and the manufacturer of both is God. It is atheistic to discuss anything but the use. Does God deal with governments and nations and W.C.T.U.'s? He does not. He deals with the individual only. To Him and to us the crowning fact is man, not in the abstract, but in the individual. Each individual has to bear his own burdens before God and nature. Let those who would supersede nature and destroy its course beware. Nature is God's work and the pride of man is just as likely to produce his destruction as any other wickedness. Bolshevikism is another name for it. A woman may consider herself a first-class Christian indeed about to do what both God and Christ did not do and yet be a Bolshevikist in reality and an atheist. An atheist is also one who denies the works of God and will substitute those of man. Woman produced one fall and may produce another. Beware lest she attempt to improve on God. The best of them wear short skirts, powder, feathers, jewellery and false teeth. That is Bolshevikism. Leave it to God. If you have faith, "pray." He has nowhere said that if man does not look after it the world will go to pieces. He said that if men (and women) do not look after themselves they will go to pieces, and He judges them as individuals. Take heed lest ye fall.

Puts Allies' Bill At $7,500,000,000

But London Banker's Indemnity Estimate Includes No Part of the Cost of the War.

LONDON.—One London banker estimates that Germany will have to pay the Allies for reparation and restitution about $7,500,000,000. Calculated on a 5 per cent. basis, with a 1 per cent. sinking fund, this would mean an annual charge on the German revenue of $450,000,000. He says there can be no question of Germany's ability to meet this demand.

It is impossible, he says, discussing the subject in a newspaper article, to arrive at any approximate figure as to damages and robberies in the invaded territory. "For Belgium," the article continues, "I would put the amount of indemnity at $1,400,000,000, of which sum levies on Belgian towns account for something like $500,000,000: I know of another estimate for Belgium which is as high as $2,000,000,000, and a Belgian of some authority estimates the amount at $800,000,000."

With regard to France, he says one cannot reckon the loss suffered, "but considering that the war has been waged for the most part on French territory, and in the centre of her industrial area, we may put the figure at $2,000,000,000."

Italy's damage is computed at $150,000,000. The same amount is set as Roumania's bill, including the loss of quantities of foodstuffs and damage to oil wells and other property. He thinks that $50,000,000 would cover Serbia's loss, and a like sum probably would reimburse England for damages caused by air raids and bombardments.

Shipping losses are then discussed. "I estimate," he says, "the loss of ships in figures of tonnage at 9,000,000, and taking the average value of $200 a ton, this would figure out at $1,800,000,000. Adding the total value of cargoes at, say $900,000,000, we have the total of $2,700,000,000 for Great Britain alone. The shipping loss of the Allies I estimate at $500,000,000.

"I have heard an estimate which places the total of the bill against Germany at $10,000,000,000, which, like my own calculations, is of course to some extent necessarily hypothetical. But I would put the figures myself at $7,500,000,000, which does not, of course, include any part of the cost of the war."

Regarding Germany's finances, he calls attention to the last pre-war budget presented to the Reichstag, which showed a revenue of $875,000,000. The estimate for the army was $202,500,000 and for the navy $107,500,000— total $400,000,000.

"Eliminating the expenditure for armaments," the article goes on, "this would allow Germany to pay approximately the interest and sinking fund on the $7,500,000,000 compensation, leaving the balance of revenue, whatever it might be, to meet the cost of conducting the empire and paying the interest on her loans, which amounted early in the present year to $27,000,000,000, a sum which has, of course, been substantially increased since."

In order to meet the Allies' bill of damages, the writer says, "it may be that Germany would have to suspend payment of interest on her own war loans—I don't say she would repudiate this obligation."

New Life Animates Bohemian Republic

Mines and Factories in Full Operation Though People Keep Up Celebrations.

PRAGUE, Bohemia.—This city, the centre of the new republic, is displaying new ambitions and new business interests. The people, rejuvenated, are waiting to celebrate the return of President Masaryk. Though signs are hung out — "Business as usual, if you please"—every night is devoted to some special patriotic entertainment, but the days are spent in attending to new political, commercial, and military problems.

Mines and factories are in full operation, everybody is working overtime and celebrating overtime; but underneath are evidences of sanity and cheerfulness, very unlike the conditions which have existed for the last few years.

Prague is like an American city of the Far West, built overnight upon an ancient European setting of castled walls and Gothic bridges over a winding river. Americans are cherished here in abiding affection. The photograph of President Wilson stands beside that of President Masaryk in many a store window.

While the newly arrived American cannot understand the pleasing speech of the people, as soon as they are aware he is present everybody smiles and bows. There is a surprisingly large number of persons who can speak English, which they modestly confess they learned right at home from friends who had been in the United States.

On the very day the correspondent arrived, there was an attempt to start riots in the city by Germans, who apparently wished to frighten the Czechs into dropping their claims for territory belonging to the ancient Bohemian kingdom which is now inhabited by Germans. But fifty persons were promptly arrested, and business went on as usual.

The democratic idea seems to be very strong here. Among the happiest and polites men are the hotel and restaurant waiters, who proudly say: "At last we are able to speak our own language. Formerly any one speaking other than German was liable to be arrested."

Despite possible loss, the hotelkeepers explain that their prices are far below those in Vienna and elsewhere. Said one: "You see, six weeks ago our prices were high because all the food was taken by the Austrian Army. But now we have cut them more than 100 per cent."

Every farmer is imbued with the new idea. Agricultural prices were cut as soon as the Provisional Government put an anti-export law on food and coal. The idea of the farmers, as they express it, is that they must get aboard the new ship of state.

In this way the farmers are combining to protect their interests by making themselves popular politically, with the final object of saving their land from too great subdivision, as the socialistic programme proposes.

The main object of the people of Bohemia now seems to be saving and preparing for the future. Many of the Czecho-slovaks, who are always prepared to fight for their rights, have spent periods in prison under the Austrian Imperial regime. They have suffered for their speeches and acts in behalf of Bohemian rights, especially during the early part of the war, when Bohemia, cut off from the Allies, surrounded by enemies and endangered by the Germans from the north, became practically a fortress of idealism, still striving for the rights of man.

Almost half of the present Government is made up of men who have either been subjected to arrest as traitors by the Austrians, or become fugitives to the friendlier soils of France, England and the United States.

ARMIES ARE BREAKING UP

GLASGOW, Dec. 18.—Tens of thousands of soldiers are moving back and forth across the old Russian frontier. They come from many nations. All are returning to their homes and some of them are pillaging as they go.

The further the correspondent penetrated eastward from Vienna, it became more evident that the disease of Bolshevism was threatening to overturn the normal life of the population.

In some districts the situation is relatively quiet. In Western Galicia and around Warsaw, the Polish capital, there are said to be no food problems.

An incident showing the manner of the wholesale pillaging which is going on in some districts was related by a daughter of Count Edward Rayoznski, who has fled to Cracow from the family estate near Lublin. She had been living near Lublin with her children since the destruction of the chateau during the Russian advance in 1917. Recently bands of robbers, composed mostly of Polish peasants, began to burn the homes of the upper classes. Jewish peasants in the neighborhood promised to protect her when she appealed to them and succeeded in beating off attacks several times. Finally she succeeded in making her way to Cracow.

It is reported here that the army of the German General Hoffman, which is supposed to consist of 200,000 men, is scattered throughout Lithuania, and Northwestern Poland. It is stated that this force has become a great menace to the peace of Poland. According to the armistice agreement it was supposed to remain where it was and keep order until January. It is reported, however, that the force is slowly disintegrating, the soldiers being anxious to get home. Some are selling their arms to the others are taking up the Bolshevist cause.

NOTED FRENCH TENOR FORCED TO CLOSE TOUR

CHICAGO, Dec. 18.—Lucien Muratore, the noted French tenor, suddenly closed his engagement with the Chicago Grand Opera Company yesterday because of ill-health, and will return at once to France for a long rest. He was stricken with an old ailment five days ago and is confined to his bed.

A young man ought to save money before he gets married, for he will probably never get a chance afterward.

A Report of Farm Conditions

High Prices Being Paid for Milk—Apples Vary in Price.

The following is a summary of reports made by agricultural representatives to the Ontario Department of Agriculture:

The Dufferin representative describes the situation not only for his own district but for the province generally when he says: "This county goes into winter quarters in much better shape than usual. Fall work is well completed. There is a tendency with some to sell grain rather than to feed, and some unfinished stuff is going out."

The fear that the price of beef may drop is also causing some to crowd their animals on the market, but the bulk of stockmen are acting more steadily, and are feeding most of their grain and fodder as usual.

Dundas reports that $3.40 per cwt. is being paid for milk shipped from Morrisburgh to Montreal. Dairy cows are selling at auction sales in Brant at from $100 to $150.

Hogs Thriving.

Hogs are thriving, owing to the abundance of coarse grains, but little pigs are now selling as low as $12 a pair. bacon animals from $17.25 to $18.50 a cwt. During November six clubs in Victoria marketed 823 hogs.

Hay has a wide range of prices, which run from $16 to $25 a a ton. This class of fodder is now reported to be very scarce.

Haldimand states that ready sales are being made of red and alsike clover and blue grass seed. Alfalfa seed is going a little slower at prices ranging at from $18 a bushel to $1 a pound.

The Dundas representative reports that there is not so large a supply of ensilage on hand as is usual in that country, as owing to unfavorable weather some of the corn grown for the silo was not harvested.

Apples vary greatly in price. Simcoe reports winter apples as selling at from $3.50 to $5.50 a barrel, depending on quality. In Prince Edward the fixures range from $4.50 to $7.50 while Greenings bring $5.50 and Spies $7 in Grey.

Fall wheat is in excellent condition except on very low land. Even late planted fields have a fair top, and the young plants are said to be well rooted.

The late fall weather was most favourable for ploughing, and an unusually large acreage was done. Haldimand reports that many farmers in that county have summer fallows ploughed for next year.

LIVED TWO YEARS ON RAW EGG DIET

John H. Packer Gains 44 Pounds and Now Eats Anything—Suffered 20 Years.

"When a man has had to live for two years on nothing much except raw eggs, on account of stomach trouble and then finds a medicine that fixes him up in less than two months so he can eat sour kraut, meats of all kinds and anything else he wants, I think it is time for him to talk for the benefit of others. Well, Tanlac has done all this for me and more, for I am now forty-four pounds heavier than I was the day I began taking it and I'm now enjoying better health than I have in at least fifteen years," was the remarkable statement made by John H. Packer, patentee and proprietor of the Packer Oil Filter, who lives at Liberty, Mo., recently.

"For twenty years or more," he continued, "I have suffered with my stomach and although I have spent thousands of dollars nothing ever helped me until I got Tanlac. My appetite left me entirely, and what little I did eat would almost double me up with pain and I would bloat up with gas until I could scarcely breathe. During the past five years, especially, I have suffered a great deal from constipation, felt tired out all the time, had no energy, and was so drowsy and listless that if I tried to talk business to a man it was an effort to express what I wanted to say.. My health finally got so bad that I was forced to give up a splendid position in Pocatello, Idaho and nobody, except those in the same condition, can fully understand how I suffered.

"I had almost lost faith in all medicines, as I had tried so many without results, but Tanlac certainly has been a revelation to me. I can now eat just anything I want and never experience a particle of trouble. I have never had a better appetite, and all signs of indigestion, gas and distress after eating are gone. Tanlac has also relieved me of constipation and strengthened and built me up until I feel as full of energy as when I was a boy. When I first started on Tanlac I weighed one hundred and twenty-four pounds, but I now weigh one hundred and sixty-eight and a half and this shows how well suited to my case Tanlac was."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd., in Havelock by A. C. Denike, in Lakefield by Tanner Drug Co., in Fowler's Corners by W. A. Hunter, in Gelert by A. J. Scott, in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

GRAIN MARKET

All the coarse grains with the exception of corn, continue in an easy market, with further slight declines in cash quotations on Manitoba oats at Fort William. There is but little call for barley, rye, or buckwheat. There is very little doing in corn locally, but in the option market, prices took quite a jump, in part a reflection of the strong cash situation and light deliveries. CONSTANTINOPLE.

(The Greek's "Eternal City.")

There is a city at the orient gates
A city brooding one aeonian dream,
In which for those who are her own she waits—
For them to reinherit and redeem!

Eternal—to her own as Rome, to hers,
Who keeps the wolf-guard on her proudest hill—
Eternal to Hellenic wanderers!
So, let them look towards great Byzantium still;

Nor look in vain, however far they dwell....
Give Greece to keep that ancient citadel
Imbruted Islam all too long defiles;
In Thrace or fragrant Smyrna, or the Isles...
Is it not just? Ye counselling Nations—speak!
The Greek's "Eternal City"—be it Greek!

BULLET TAKEN FROM HEAD OF WOMAN, WHO MAY NOW RECOVER

WOODSTOCK, Dec. 17. — Doctors have been successful in removing the bullet from the head of Mrs. Adam Mansz, accidentally shot by her son Friday night, and the victim has now a chance for recovery.

About 6 o'clock in the evening the rising with a rifle in the back yard, 13-year-old son of Mrs. Mansz was practhen a stray bullet crashed through the kitchen window, hitting the mother in the back of the head.

She was rendered unconscious, in which condition she remained until Saturday, when the bullet was removed. It is understood that the boys of the village had been indulging in rifle practice to quite an extent, although it is unlawful.

PROPOSOLS CAME EN MASSE.

Miss Besler cannot Number Those of Grateful Soldier Audiences.

PARIS. — Miss Helen Besler, the daughter of the President of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, is probably the most proposed-to girl in France to-day. It all came about because one night in one of the American camps she ran out of encores and sang a little nursery song called "If no one ever Marries me." It goes like this—

"If no one ever marries me,—
And I don't see why they should,
For nurse says I am not pretty,
And I'm seldom very good."

The direful fate of the little girl in the song was to be to buy a rabbit-hutch and live all alone in a little wood. But the American soldiers saw no reason why Miss Besler, who is pretty and petite and a typical American girl, should have a similar lot. After they had given her three cheers and a tiger with which they usually thank the Y. M. C. A. entertainers, they hesitated a moment and then added a purely personal message:

"Barkis is willin'," called the A.E.F. as one man.

Since then the incident has been repeated in every American camp Miss Besler has visited. No censor would allow an estimate of the number of proposals she received in that way to pass.

TIRED AND DISCOURAGED

Mrs. Warren Randles, Rothesay, Kings County, N.B., "I have three small children and had to stay in the house all winter. So when spring came I was all run down doing all my work and looking after the children. I felt all tired out, and looked on the gloomy side all the time. I decided to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and the results were most satisfactory. I feel fine now, and am recommending the Nerve Food to others."

LAKEFIELD NEWS OF INTEREST

Curling Club Dance Was a Big Success.

LAKEFIELD, Dec. 20.—The first of a series of dances given in aid of the Soldiers' Comfort Club by the Returned Soldiers and the Curling Club, was held in the Lakefield Town Hall on Thursday evening. About seventy-five were present and enjoyed a very delightful evening. Owing to the busy Christmas season and the fact of there being so much illness the attendance was not so large as was hoped for. However it is expected that there will be a much larger attendance at the next as all who were present so thoroughly enjoyed themselves. Among the out of town guests were Cadet Gerald Moore of Saskatchewan and Mrs. J. Knox of Peterboro. The hostesses were Mesdames, Marling, Stuart, Ridpath and Chant. The hall was most attractively decorated with flags, greens and Christmas wreaths with the honor flag of the Victory Loan in a place of honor.

The music was furnished by an orchestra from Peterboro and was of the finest quality and the many encores testified to its popularity. Mr. Archie Moore of Peterboro filled the important post of floor manager in his inimitable manner.

Supper was served at midnight and the festive gathering broke up shortly after two o'clock .The next dance will be held on January 2nd and a good time is assured to all.

Mrs. Wall of Peterboro is the guest of Mrs. Wm. Stabler.

Mrs. Fred Brown spent Friday in Peterborough.

Mrs. Osborne was a visitor to Peterboro on Friday.

Dr. and Mrs. Finnemore were in Peterboro on Friday.

Mrs. (Capt.) Marling went in to Peterboro on Friday.

Schools Closed at Opportune Time, Says Dr. Amys, M.O.H.

May be the Means of Preventing the Spread of Influenza.

While there is nothing to be alarmed over in the reported second outbreak of Spanish influenza in the city, Dr. C. H. Amys, M.O.H., said to-day that the closing of the schools for the Christmas holidays came at an opportune time to save any spread of the few cases that evidently exist. So far as he knows, however, there is no ground for any immediate alarm over the situation. He would advise however, that the people refrain from attending any public gathering without having such places banned by him.

Asked if the present weather had anything to do with the apparent return of the epidemic, he said "no." A friend from the South told him that they are praying for rain there to stamp out the epidemic, while we of the North prayed recently for dry weather to accomplish the same end.

One doctor told The Examiner that he is at present attending 19 cases of Spanish influenza in the city, while another said there is none to his knowledge, but some colds taken seriously.

T. H. HUNTER SAW AMERICA, SAYS CANADA EXCELS

Peace River District Particularly Impressed Him With Its Opportunities for Cattle Raising.

AWAY SINCE MARCH

A nin-months' tour of America has convinced Mr. Thomas H. Hunter, who has just returned home, that there are few sections of North America comparable with old Ontario, and his own North Monaghan. After selling his implements and stock, and renting his land, Mr. Hunter joined the retired farmers' class last winter and set out to see America. Early in March he left Peterborough and by easy stages travelled south through the Atlantic States, turned west at the Gulf, visited Texas, and, crossing New Mexico, came north through California. In the early autumn he faced homewar dafter various trips in British Columbia. On the way east he went north into the Peace River district, there Mr. Hunter found a ranching land of promise. It appealed to him more than sunny California with its long droughts, relieved by irrigation, or the languid south, or the bustling communities in the Eastern States. The Peace River district is out of the beaten path, but Mr. Hunter states that is is a wonderful ranching country. Excellent grazing land may be rented at two cents an acre. The grass is knee high, lush and plenty of it The country is well watered and although the winters are cold the animals are said to thrive under ordinary proper care.

Journeying through Texas Mr. Hunter saw the carcasses of hundreds and hundreds of cattle that had died in the fields due to the lack of water. Farmers told him that there had been no rain for sixteen months and some of them were thinking of moving to other States.

The coast of California is a mecca of tourists and the fatuous idols of the movie crowds, but from an agricultural aspect it rates low in Mr. Hunter's estimation. Last winter was so mild in Oregon that the armies of insects and bugs survived and in early summer stripped the state of its verdure. Apples and some wheat were harvested, but other crops were wiped out.

In fact, Mr. Hunter can enumerate faults and objections to all parts of the continent that offset their other attractions. "We have the best part of North Monaghan," he said, "and I am glad that I made the trip if for no other reason than the proofs I saw that Canada is the best part of North America."

Mr. Hunter intends to visit Europe next, with a sojourn in Ireland, where he has relatives. He hopes to visit France and see the battle fields, the ruined cities and other scars of the war.

PROTECT YOURSELF

Influenza is again obtaining a foothold in Peterborough and the surrounding country, People cannot be too cautious and careful in protecting themselves from this dreaded disease. The best preventative is to wash the mouth and gargle the throat every morning and night with PYROLL.

Doctors, dentists and druggists recommend PYROLL as a preventative and no person should be without it.

LADLE IN A TREE

Made of Steel, Seven Inches Long, Imbedded Deeply.

A steel ladle, seven inches long, supposed to have been used by Indians in melting lead for bullets many years ago, was found imbedded in the heart of a red oak tree being sawed up for stove wood by Policeman John Gartland and Max Linder at the latter's home at South Altoona Penn. Rings on the tree indicate that it was more than 100 years old. The implement made from finest charcoal steel, is believed to have been driven into the tree when it was a sapling.

GREEKS SUFFERED MUCH

Problem of Relief is Pressing —Condition of Refugees is Pitiable.

SALONIKI, Dec. 20—One of the most pressing problems facing the Greek Government is the care of tens of thousands of Greek inhabitants of Macedonia who have been left destitude by the war and to provide for the great number of refugees who are returning to Greece. To meet the situation the Greek Government has appropriated $500,000 for relief work.

The condition of the returning refugees excites pity everywhere. Some have gone through such experiences in Bulgaria that they seem to have lost use of their mental powers. Of the 100,000 or more Greeks deported from Macedonia by the Bulgarians thirty thousand are said to have died of starvation, disease and the rigors of exile An officer of the Greek Government declared that between 40,000 and 50,000 inhabitants of Eastern Macedonia have died for lack of food during the Bulgarian occupation.

THE WIFE

BY JANE PHELPS

Ruth is Again Obliged to Go Away. Brian Objects at First.

CHAPTER LXVIII.

These occasional conversations with Mrs. Curtis anent the "woman question" gave Ruth much food for thought. She was the last sort of woman to insist upon her "rights" or to parade her capabilities in any direction. She intended to do her work. From choice, the more quietly she was enabled to do it, the better she was pleased. But if to have it exploited helped the firm, she had no right to object.

When she had demurred at having her name put on the cards of the firm as its expert in her line, Mandel had argued with her. His arguments contained much truth, and he knew how to present them to Ruth in such a way that she immediately recognized their force. Then, too, she very naturally was flattered to think he considered her work good enough to give it such prominence.

This was another fly in Brian's ointment — a great, big, buzzing creature that he seemed unable to brush away. Back it came insistently with its annoying accompaniment of noisy suggestion.

Then once more she was told she would have to go away; suddenly, as had happened before.

"You can go?" Mandel asked, after explaining what was needed.

"Certainly." Ruth recognized the call on her was a business one. She had elected to be a business woman, so she must obey without hesitation.

The train she was expected to take for a town in Northern New York left the Grand Central Station at five o'clock. Mr. Mandel had told her she might go directly and pack. It was only a little after two, and she knew with Rachel's help she could pack all she needed in a half hour. At first she thought of telephoning Brian to meet her at the train to say "good bye." Then decided she would surprise him. So she jumped into a taxi and gave his office address to the driver.

She found Brian doggedly at work over some papers. He scowled as she opened the door, interrupting him. But when he turned and saw her, the scowl left his face to be replaced by one of amazement. Unless it had been to meet him to go somewhere for the evening, Ruth never had visited the office.

"I have to go away at five, so I came down to say good-bye," she said as brightly as she was able. It tore her heart-strings to leave him again. She told him in a few words where she was going, how long she expected to remain.

He listened in silence, making no objection. When she finished he said:

"Who's going with you?" thoughts of Mandel bringing the scowl back to his face.

"No one! Why?"

"I thought perhaps that boss of yours was going with you again. He seems to like to have you with him. Pays you enough for your society."

"Oh, Brian!" was all Ruth said in reply to his unkind insinuation, but her eyes filled.

"That's right! play the innocent! Of course you don't know he is in love with you. You never thought of such a thing."

"No, Brian, I never have. If you could see just how Mr. Mandel is with me, you would not say such untrue and such unkind things. I am simply one of his clerks. That is all. He is always gentlemanly, never anything more."

"And I am not that, I suppose."

"Oh, Brian," she said again. How could she go and do the work expected of her and leave him in this mood? To her harrassed mind and heart, his words affected her more than he had any idea. Disturbing thoughts of Mollie King also intruded. She would not say one word to make him more impatient of her going than he already was.

She said she must be going, then waited, hoping he would say something about being at the train, or at least that he would go down to the taxi with her. Unfortunately, she made faux pas at this juncture, one upon which he was quick to seize.

"It is too bad you can't ride home with me," she said, "but I see you are busy. When the firm pays for the taxi, I feel quite reckless, so kept it waiting."

"Furnishes you with taxis too, does he? I suppose all the rest of his clerks are sent around in taxis at his expense. I believe you just said you were just one of his clerks."

Ruth scarcely knew what to say or do. She felt she couldn't leave Brian in his present state of mind. He would be reckless while she was away; and she, thinking of him, would be unfitted for her work.

"Brian, dear, please let us be fair to each other," she said, putting her arms around his neck and kissing him. I love you with all my heart, dear. I never give a single thought to anyone else. And you know it too, you naughty boy. Now kiss me and send me away with a smile."

She was hard to resist, when in this mood. Brian kissed her, then took her in his arms, and told her he was a brute, and several other things. When perfect peace had been made, he took her down to the taxi and stood watching as long as he could see her waiving to him.

Monday—Mr. Mandel Urges Ruth To Take a Rest. She Refuses.

Tells How to Stop a Bad Cough

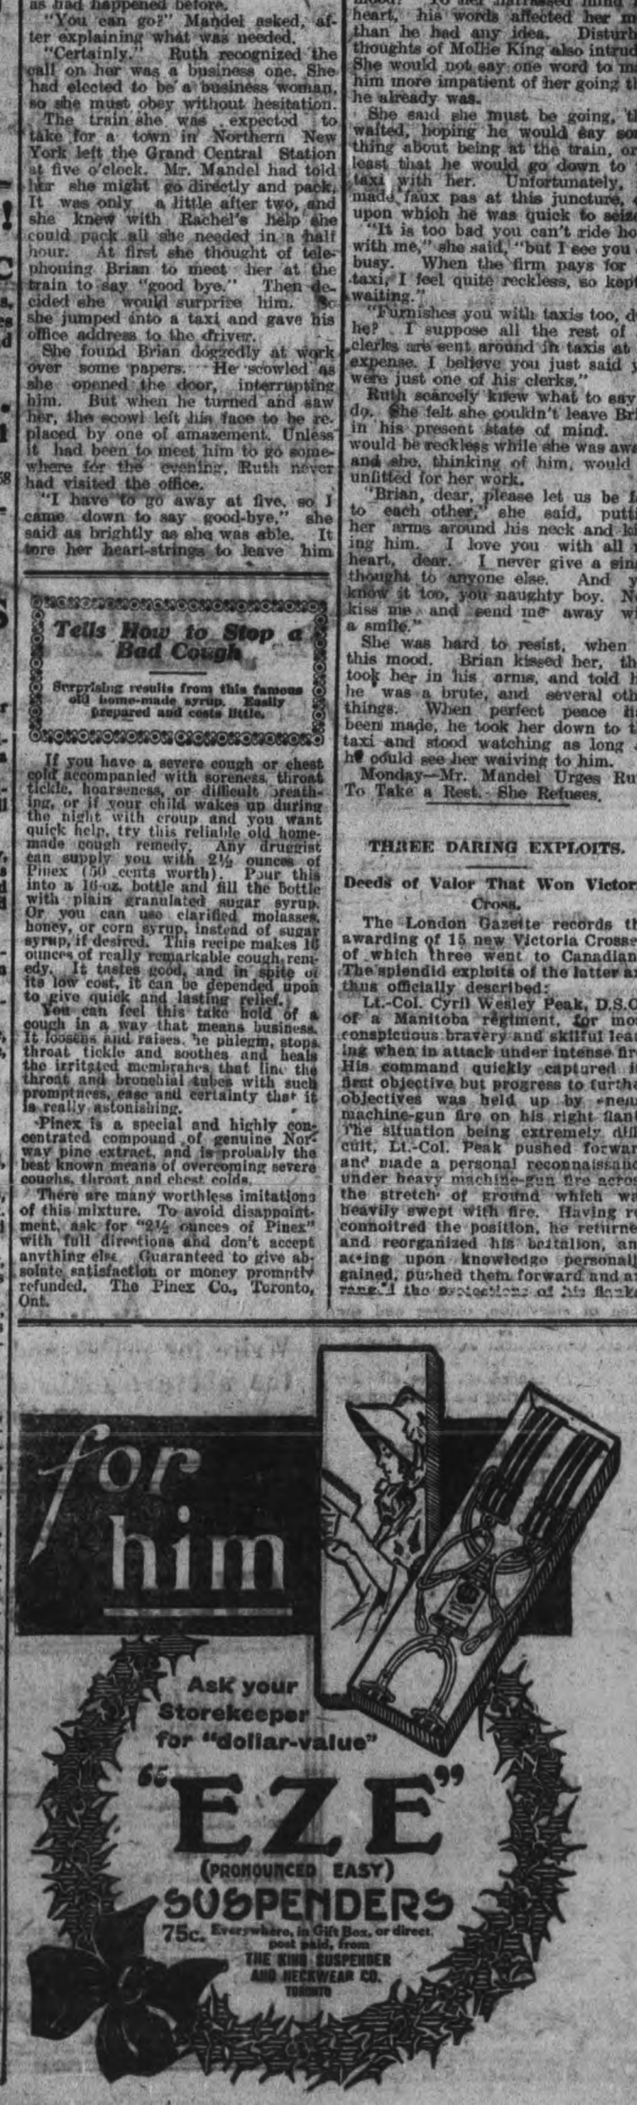
Surprising results from this famous old home-made syrup. Easily prepared and costs little.

If you have a severe cough or chest cold accompanied with soreness, throat tickle, hoarseness, or difficult breathing, or if your child wakes up during the night with croup and you want quick help, try this reliable old home-made cough remedy. Any druggist can supply you with 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth). Pour this into a 16-oz. bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. Or you can use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup, if desired. This recipe makes 16 ounces of really remarkable cough remedy. It tastes good, and in spite of its low cost, it can be depended upon to give quick and lasting relief.

You can feel this take hold of a cough in a way that means business. It loosens and raises the phlegm, stops throat tickle and soothes and heals the irritated membranes that line the throat and bronchial tubes with such promptness, ease and certainty that it is really astonishing.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and is probably the best known means of overcoming severe coughs, throat and chest colds.

There are many worthless imitations of this mixture. To avoid disappointment, ask for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.



THREE DARING EXPLOITS.

Deeds of Valor That Won Victoria Cross.

The London Gazette records the awarding of 15 new Victoria Crosses, of which three went to Canadians. The splendid exploits of the latter are thus officially described:

Lt.-Col. Cyril Wesley Peak, D.S.O., of a Manitoba regiment, for most conspicuous bravery and skilful leading when in attack under intense fire. His command quickly captured its first objective but progress to further objectives was held up by enemy machine-gun fire on his right flank. The situation being extremely difficult, Lt.-Col. Peak pushed forward and made a personal reconnaissance under heavy machine-gun fire across the stretch of ground which was heavily swept with fire. Having reconnoitred the position, he returned and reorganized his battalion, and acting upon knowledge personally gained, pushed them forward and arranged the protection of his flanks. He then went out under the most intense artillery and machine-gun fire intercepted the tanks and gave the necessary directions, pointing out where they were to make for and thus pave a way made for a Canadian infantry battalion to push forward. To this battalion he subsequently gave the requisite support by his magnificent display of courage and fine qualities of leadership. He personally led the advance and caused it to be continued although always under heavy machine-gun and artillery fire, and contributed largely to the success of a brigade attack.

The second Victoria Cross was awarded to Lieut. Charles Smith Rutherford, M.C., M.M., of Quebec of a Quebec regiment, for the most conspicuous bravery, initiative and devotion to duty. When in command of an assaulting party, Lieut. Rutherford found himself a considerable distance ahead of his men, and at the same moment observed a fully armed and strong enemy party outside a pill box ahead of him. He beckoned to them with his revolver to come to him. In return they waved to him to come to them. He boldly did this and informed them they were his prisoners. An enemy officer disputed this fact, and invited Lieut. Rutherford to enter the pill box, which invitation he discreetly declined. By a masterly bluff, however, he persuaded the enemy that they were surrounded and the whole party, numbering 45, including two officers and three machine guns, surrendered to him. Lieut. Rutherford subsequently induced the enemy officer to stop the fire of a machine gun close by. Lieut. Rutherford took advantage of this opportunity to hasten the advance of his men to his support. He then observed on the right an assaulting party that was held up by heavy machine-gun fire from another pill box. Indicating an objective to the remainder of his party he attacked the pill box with a Lewis gun section and captured a further 35 prisoners with machine guns, thus enabling the party to continue the advance. This officer's bold and gallant action contributed very materially to the capture of the main objective and was a wonderful inspiration to all ranks in pressing home the attack on a very strong position.

Acting Sergeant Arthur George Knight, late of an Albertan regiment, was awarded the Victoria Cross for the most conspicuous bravery, initiative and devotion to duty, when after an unsuccessful attack Knight led a bombing section forward under very heavy fire of all descriptions and engaged the enemy at close quarters. Seeing that his party continued to be held up, he dashed forward alone, bayonetting several enemy machine-gunners and mortar crews and forcing the remainder to retire in confusion. He then brought forward a Lewis gun and directed fire upon the retreating enemy, inflicting many casualties. Sergt. Knight in the subsequent advance of his platoon in pursuit saw a party of about 30 of the enemy enter a deep tunnel which led off the trench. He again dashed forward alone, and having killed one officer and two non-commissioned officers, he captured twenty of other ranks. Subsequently he routed single-handed another enemy party which opposed the platoon's advance. On each occasion he displayed the greatest valor under fire at very close range, and by the example of his courage, gallantry and initiative was a wonderful inspiration to all. This very gallant non-commissioned officer was subsequently fatally wounded.

Canada's Food Exports.

In the twelve months ending September, $1,363,749,000 worth of merchandise was exported from Canada.

Of this total more than $604,000,000, well on to one-half, was made up of products of the farm, animal products accounting for $163,488,000, and other agricultural produce for $440,742,000.

The nearest approach to the value of farm exports was in manufactures, which represented a total of $579,597,000.

Of cheese we exported 172,000,000 pounds in the twelve months ending with September; of butter, 6,500,000 pounds; of bacon, 130,745,000 pounds; of beef, 98,716,000 pounds; of pork 19,788,000 pounds; of canned meats, 5,994,000 pounds; of wheat flour, 10,229,000 barrels; of wheat, 105,234,000 bushels; of milk and cream, $7,747,264, and of living animals, $21,773,000.

Small Dog, But of Great Heart.

At Sardis, B.C., recently a little Irish terrier jumped a cougar bent on robbing the hennery and held on as Irish terriers do. When the alarmed head of the household reached the scene the cougar had escaped, but Pat had a mouthful of cougar hide and hair to submit as circumstantial evidence of the visitor's identity.

Expanding Screw For Railways.

For attaching rails to ties on railroads a Frenchman has invented a screw that is said to hold tighter than anything yet devised. It is in two parts, first a hollow screw, open at the lower end, slit a short distance up the sides and having a worm inside as well as outside. This is screwed into the hole in the tie. Into it is screwed the second part, which is a solid screw, conical in shape. As this is driven home it forces the lower end of the hollow screw apart, making it spread and become wider below than above, thus biting the wood of the tie in a way that makes it inextricable.

TALES OF THE V.C.

By LIEUT. J. P. LLOYD.

"On the occasion of the hostile attack at Moeuvres on the 17th inst., a corporal and six men of the Highland Light Infantry, 52nd Division, forming the garrison of one of outpost just north of the village, were surrounded and believed to have been captured. During the two days in which the Germans were in occupation of Moeuvres, this party, in fact, maintained their position, and inflicted many casualties on the enemy. On the night of the 19th 20th inst., when Moeuvres was retaken by our troops the whole party regained their unit without loss."

Thus the British Official Communique, issued from General Headquarters in France on the morning of the 21st of September, 1918.

The ruins of the village of Moeuvres are set on the brow of a low slope which looks down on the dry bed of the Canal du Nord. Death has stalked through Moeuvres many times during these four years of war. It is in the heart of a country which the battle of Cambrai in the autumn of 1917 has made historic. Pronville Inchy-en-Artois, Graincourt, Flesquieres, Moeuvres itself, all these places have risen out of obscurity into a terrible fame. Between Moeuvres and Queant, four miles to the West, and then Southwards along the canal, the Hindenburg Line, that "invulnerable fortress" which our soldiers have taken sprawls its read tentacles across the map. Two and a half miles away the manned spikes of Bourlan Wood stand out boldly against the Eastern sky.

On Monday night the 16th of September, a Brigade of the 52nd Division went into line between Inchy-en Aartois and Moeuvres, the relief taking place after dark.

The right company of the Brigade took over from a company of the Munsters three posts on the road that runs northwards out of Moeuvres to Inchy, one of them at its junction with Hobart Trench, which joins the Hindenburg support line and the Canal du Nord, and the other two at intervals of 200 yards southwards along the road.

The left post of the next brigade was on the northern edge of the village of Moeuvres.

This tale concerns the garrison of the most southernly of the three posts on the Inchy road.

This post, after the manner of modern fighting consisted simply of a group of shell-holes, encircled by a ragged fringe of wire. Behind it the ground rose gently towards the main defences of the Hindenburg line. The Canal was half-a-mile away across the flat ground in front.

At some time during the night of the 16th an N. C. O. and six men of the Munsters filed out of the post and a corporal and six men of the H. L. I. filed in.

The corporal's name was David Ferguson Hunter, and the names of his men were Privates J. L. Phillips D. McFarlane, W. Jones, W. Gray and J. Fleming, and one man who is now dead. The newcomers brought with them a Lewis gun and ammunition, a few bombs, and their rations and water for the next day.

That night passed quietly, as nights go on the Western front. As one of the party has put it "there was just the usual shelling, nothing to worry about."

The 17th, too, was a quiet day, but it was only the hush before the storm.

In the dusk of the September evening there fell about them suddenly a rain of gas and high explosives. And, when the guns had prepared the way, the Germans attacked.

They came in full flood across the level plain against the Inchy road. The post on the northern edge of Moeuvres and the post on Corporal Hunter's left were both driven in, but the corporal and his men stood up like sullen rocks above the sea of their enemies. They heard the noise of battle drift slowly westwards, but Corporal Hunter saw no reason to withdraw. "We had got no further orders," said one of his comrades afterwards, 'so we decided to hold on trusting our own boys would make a counter-attack and relieve us."

When the main attack was over the Germans tried several times to destroy their handful of insolent Scotchmen who presumed to oppose the might of the German Army. Again and again their bombers stole up in the darkness, but always keen eyes were watching for them, and rifle and machine gun drove thm back whence they came.

So that night passed and another day. The seven men had now no rations except the 'iron ration" that the British soldier carries in his pack, and no water except such foul and nauseous liquid as they could scoop from the bottom of shell-holes.

During the night of the 18th, Corporal Hunter sent out two men, bidding them try to get into touch with the company. They never came back. One of them was killed. The other, after wandering for eight hours in the wilderness of No Man's Land, was badly wounded, and only reached the British lines as dawn was breaking At midnight one of the sentries on duty reported that a patrol of the enemy was approaching the post. Corporal Hunter gave his men the order to fire, and the Germans, disappointed once more of their prey, went back to their lines. Just before daylight Private Jones made an effort to crawl back, but in a little while he returned. It was impossible to break through, "so there was nothing else but to still hold on."

One more day these brave men spent in the pangs of hunger and thirst, but not a man of them thought of surrender.

On the evening of Thursday the 19th came the most welcome sound they had heard during their three day's ordeal, the full-throated voice of the British guns. It is odd that, after all they had suffered and endured because of their enemies, these five men in their shell-holes should come to be in the greatest peril of all from their friends. Yet it was so. Pressed close to the parados, they heard all about them the whistle and the roar of the descending shells, and saw the Inchy road and the light railway which run beside it wrapped in an orange sheet of flame. Then fell a sudden silence, and afterwards out of the night behind them came the thin shouts of men and the noise of bursting bombs.

Help was close at hand, but before barrage pealed out upon the Inchy road. At about 10 p.m. that night a corporal of another battalion of the H.L.I going forward to join his company, was challenged as he passed a group of shell-holes on the edge of the road. He turned sharply to find himself covered by an uncompromizing muzzle of a machine gun with the haggard unshaven but equally uncompromising face of a British soldier behind it. The corporal explained that the line had moved on and that such strict precautions were hardly necessary under the circumstances. The man in the shell-hole replied that he was glad to hear it. He had been there three days, and that was the first he'd heard, of it anyway

Then Corporal Hunter and his weary men lifted their Lewis gun from the parapet, climbed out of their shell-holes, and, guided by their new friend, returned to their old company headquarters in Hobart Street.

All five of them were utterly exhausted. The strains of their three days watching had left its mark upon them. Yet their comrades, who had never hoped to see them again "were impressed by their air of cheerfulness and good spirits." That night the battalion was relieved.

FOR VITAL STATISTICS

Uniformity Decided on by Conference in Ottawa.

OTTAWA, Dec. 19.—Uniformity in the collection of vital statistics throughout Canada was decided upon at a conference held here this week between Dominion and Provicial officials. A model bill has been prepared which will be passed by all the Provinces. It is expected that four of the Provinces will enact the necessary legislation this coming session, namely, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Hitherto the methods of collection of vital statistics in some Provinces has been very imperfect while there has been no uniformity in system. Mr. R. H. Coates, Dominion Statician, who has been endeavoring to secure unity of action in collection of statistics of all kinds, has had the matter under consideration for the past year A model bill has now been prepared and agreed upon. The provinces will still collect the statistics but will send copies of their returns to Ottawa in order that figures for the Dominion can be totalled. The Dominion will bear part of the expense

ORNAMENTS FROM RHEIMS.

Twenty Cases Turned Over to Bishop of Berne.

PARIS, Dec. 19.—Havas—Bishop Maglione, of Berne, has received from Cardinal, Hartmann, Archbishop of Cologne, twenty cases containing religious ornaments which were taken from the diocese of Rheims by German soldiers. They will be sent to France.

BRITAIN MAY HAVE FIVE DELEGATES AT THE PEACE TABLE AND U. S. THREE

PARIS, Dec. 20.—No decision has yet been reached as to the number of delegates which will represent each country at the peace conference, the arrival of the British delegates being awaited.

The claims of the British colonies to participate in the deliberations are receiving serious consideration. At the same time it is feared that unless some limitation is placed on the number of delegates the conference will become too large to accomplish results. It is understood that the British Government plans to have five delegates at the peace table, and that the United States will have three delegates at the peace conference.

A GREETING TO OUR RETURNING SOLDIERS.

(Changed from "We'll be waiting when you come back home," No. 169 Awakening Songs Canadian edition.)

You went to fight our battles
In the trenches 'over there,'
You left your home and country
For the war-torn world 'somewhere,'
Though we could not stand beside you
As your days of trial came
Yet, as mothers, sweethearts, brothers,
We're rejoicing that you've come back home.

Chorus—
We're rejoicing that you've come back home
From the trenches of a foreign land;
We're rejoicing that you've come back home,
Here's a welcome from your own home land,
You'll find the home fires burning
And each loyal home heart turning
With great joy to your returning
We're rejoicing that you've come back home.

When you were in the trenches
We often had our fears
That bullets from the Hun machines
Might cause our flowing tears,
But since you have escaped them
And crossed the raging foam,
We give you hearty welcome
We're rejoicing that you've come back home.

Though comrades may have fallen
On far-off Flanders fields,
Yet God has willed that you should know
The joys that victory yields.
Not till the stars of morning
Fade and fall from heaven's dome
Can our loving hearts forget you.
We're rejoicing that you've come back home.

AVIATOR IS KILLED IN NEW MAIL TEST

Card B. Smith Falls to Death at Elizabeth on Eve of Chicago Service.

ELIZABETH, N.J., Dec. 19.—Starting an experiment flight with one of the De Haviland planes which are to be used in the extension of the air mail service from New York to Chicago, Carl B. Smith, an aviator about 30 years old of Brockton, Mass., fell to his death under his wrecked machine at the Standard Aircraft Corporation Field here when something went wrong after the flier attained a height of but 200 feet. Buried under the heavy plane, of the type the army used as fighting craft, Smith, who had been a balloonist and aviator for eleven years, was killed instantly, nearly every bone in his body being broken.

Smith recently left the naval air service to become a civilian flier for the Post Office Department. He was making one of the last flights from the Elizabeth field for that department just before the eastern terminus of the air mail system was transferred back to New York, when the became the victim of the first fatal accident which has marred the air mail traffic since its inception.

EXCEED 20,000 MONTH LIMIT.

Director of Transportation Says that All Speed is being Exercised in Getting the Men Home.

OTTAWA, December 20. — Thus far the Militia Department has exceeded its estimate of 20,000 men a month in bringing Canadian soldiers back form overseas. Col. J. E. Clark, director of supplies and transportation at Militia Headquarters, this morning, stated that all speed compatible with water and rail transportation was being exercised in returning the men, and that about four thousand more than the estimate would be returned by the end of December. Already provision has been made for returning five thousand early in January, and it seems likely that the work will proceed with despatch during the New Year.

Col. Clarke drew attention to the arrangements which had been made for the comfort of the men, while travelling by rail from the points of debarkation. The Militia Department, he said, had supplied the railroads with necessary bedding, etc., so that every man required to travel at night, would have a comfortable bed to sleep in. The meals served on the trains were as good as those in first class hotels, and the heating and lighting of the cars was a subject of primary consideration. On board of each train, he stated, was an officer who reported to headquarters at each divisional point, the time of the arrival of the train, and any complaints as to food, heating, lighting, etc. Thus the Militia Department was in a position to see that any unsatisfactory conditions were remedied without delay.

Have YOU any idea what that decision is costing you—even if you live? Of course, if you die the cost is much GREATER.

Read the following facts and then decide for yourself:

The premium you would pay for $1000 of insurance at age 60 WOULD BUY YOU nearly $4000 of insurance at age 21.

The premium you pay for $1000 of insurance at age 50 WOULD BUY YOU nearly $2500 at age 21.

The premium you pay for $1000 of insurance at age 35 WOULD BUY YOU $1440 at age 21.

Besides, while you may be insurable at age 21 you may not be insurable, AT ANY PRICE, at the other ages mentioned.

LATEST DEATH TEST.

Based Upon the Action of Fluorescine Upon the Blood.

A remarkable new method of testing absolutely whether a dead person is really dead and thus avoiding the possibility of premature burial, just announced by Dr. Icard of Marseilles, has been received with great interest by his colleagues in Paris.

Dr. Icard's system depends on the question whether the blood is still in circulation or not and consists of a small subcutaneous injection of a small quantity of fluorescine, which is quite harmless, but one of the most violent coloring matters known.

If there be the slightest motion of the blood the fluorescine, carried around the body, stains it a vivid golden yellow, while the eyes become a deep emerald green. If, on the other hand, there is no movement of the blood the coloring matter is not dispersed and produces no effect. Half an hour is stated to be enough to make this test.

The laity, while duly impressed by this neat method, are asking whether persons who are alive and undergo the dyeing process and who later recover will lose the golden yellow tint, and the green eyes, which, as Dr. Icard describes them, "are transformed into superb emeralds, set like jewels in their sockets."

It may be added, however, that fluorescine is one of the most transitory dyes known.—Paris Cor. Philadelphia Ledger.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Feeding the Neck.

For a thin, scrawny neck nothing is so good as a massage with cocoa butter or olive oil. This sounds disagreeable, but, as a matter of fact the treatment is very pleasant and the effect decidedly beneficial. The cocoa butter or oil should be rubbed in at night, the neck and shoulders first having been thoroughly cleaned with warm water and the pores of the skin having been opened by the application of cloths wrung out in very hot water.

Too Much Ventilation.

Two French bacteriologists contend that modern ventilating systems are dangerous to human health, as they distribute disease germs in places where otherwise there would be but a few.

New Book of Praise

THE Presbyterian Church in Canada may well feel deeply satisfied with the revision of its "Book of Praise." It is worthy of a great church, and worthy of the great press which produces it. Indeed, as a mere feat of book-making during the war, it is wholly remarkable. We are sure that, to use the compilers' words, it will be gratefully received as an "excellent gift to the church." Some two hundred hymns have been added. This is partly accounted for by the very generous provision made for children. It is a noble conception which aims to make the church's "Book of Praise" their book. Fine hymns in the former book, which somehow failed, have been given a more successful setting, as "There Came a Child to Earth" and "Again the Morn of Gladness." Exquisite gems have been added, such as "Luther's Cradle Hymn" and "The World Looks Very Beautiful"; and we can imagine the welcome awaiting "The First Nowel" and "God Rest You, Merry Gentlemen," when the Christmas season arrives.

It is interesting to observe that what appears in the new hymn book of the Methodist Church as a section of hymns on "Social Service," is here described as "Brotherly Love and Service." Phrases subtly expressive of the time will pass, the thing in itself endure. We could perhaps have wished that Dean Alford's "Speak Thou the Truth" had been here included by the Presbyterian Communion. On the other hand, the third stanza of Hosmer's splendid hymn is not omitted. Der Tag! Were ever human aspirations at a great crisis so voiced as in these stanzas:

"And lo! already on the hills
The flags of dawn appear;
Gird up your loins, ye prophet souls,
Proclaim the day is near:

"The day in whose clear shining light
All wrong shall stand revealed,
When justice shall be clothed with might,
And every hurt be healed."

It is well to consider the difficulties of such an undertaking as this. Use and wont hallow words and music in despite of maturing judgment and richer experience of life. In the sphere of the ideal—how much more in the field of religious aspiration—we would impose our personal likings upon young and old alike. More than all, it is the note of North American life to cut adrift from tradition. With admirable taste and self-restraint the "Book of Praise" provides for young and old, for the eager, forward-looking temper of the time, and for those who follow in spirit, but not with their feet, for whom "the old is better." But the compilers are more than conservative. They seek to release with fresh power the universal through the Christian ages. While the sentimental and eccentric are avoided, tenderness and simplicity have equal place with the dignified and noble, as they should. "Shall We Gather at the River" and "There Were Ninety and Nine" belong to the same day and generation as "O Thou Not Made With Hands," "The Saints of God, Their Conflicts Past," and "None Other Name," and by their presence they exemplify the spirit in which the revision has been made.

Perhaps the most striking feature in the words is the richness of the material from the Psalms. How many men and women have felt during the great war a life glowing within the Psalms such as they had never suspected! A quiet effort is here made by drawing upon richer versions, by exquisite taste in selecting and editing the older literal renderings, and by making the whole body of selections an integral, not a special, part of the book, to assert the undying value of the Psalms. As for the musical settings, we venture to express our belief that no hymn book prepared for the actual use of a whole church has ever come so near to achieving the impossible. The number of tunes specially composed is very slight, but the range and wealth of material is great. The "Oxford Hymn Book" had already drawn fresh attention to S. S. Wesley's "European Psalmist," and the influence of both is visible in the "Book of Praise." The "Scottish Mission Hymn Book" and the "English Hymnal!" have been pointedly suggestive, the latter especially in redirecting attention to old English and French melodies and to the Genevan psalters. The attempt to revive the plain-song will be watched with great interest, while the selection of Welsh melodies will create surprise that we have remained in ignorance of this fertile field.

And This In Fair Canada.

Constable Peters of Chatham discovered three brothers of the Johnson family, the trio paralyzed from their hips downward, crawling about on their stomachs in a shack at Chatham Gore. The brothers had all been paralyzed from birth and were utterly neglected by the parents, save that they threw food to them at intervals. There was none in the shack when the officer visited it.

Druggist Made Mistake.

Dr. C. A. Jarvis, one of Brantford's best known druggists and a leading Rotarian, died recently in his store through having got the wrong bottle in dispensing a prescription for himself. After taking a draught he had only time to gasp "Send for Dr. Phillips. I have made a mistake," and life had ended.

New Wheat Mark.

S. Little, a farmer of Oakville, Man., threshed 1,335 bushels of wheat from a 27-acre field, an average of 70 bushels to the acre, a record for Manitoba.

It is often unwise for a man to be as funny as he can.

Why isn't it genuine sarcasm to call some servants "help"?

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

The Cold Bath.

If you do not feel warm after a cold bath you had better not take it, for it is doing you no good. It is a mistake to get into a bath by standing in the cold water and hesitating before taking the plunge, for this drives the blood up toward the head and is likely to cause congestion of the blood vessels of the throat. The best way is to stand in an empty bathtub and turn on the shower, so that the cold water will strike the head and shoulders first.

If there is not a shower apparatus, souse the head and neck first with a sponge or duck the head under water; then get in and plunge the whole body under as quickly as possible. Another mistake is to stay in too long. Generally speaking, one plunge is enough. After the bath rub the skin briskly with rough towels, to help in the return of the surface circulation. Vigorous exercise is also good after a bath.

A Busy Flying School.

It has been left to the military authorities of England to erect the first signboard warning people against aeroplanes. This is erected on Salisbury plain, near the Central Flying school, where the naval and military flying men are trained. On busy days aeroplanes pass and repass over the plain with such frequency that an unsuspecting civilian might easily receive damage from one of the defensive "wasps" of Great Britain.

IF BACKACHY OR KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat less meat and take a glass of Salts to flush out Kidneys. Drink plenty water.

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a real sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

A GREAT INFIELD.

Brouthers Thinks It Was the Best the Game Ever Saw.

In the midst of a rabid pennant discussion two experts suddenly switched into a heated argument as to which was the greatest infield that ever played—the Chicago Cubs, with Chance, Evers, Tinker and Steinfeldt, or Mack's Athletics, with McInnis, Collins, Barry and Baker.

The rebuttal was finally put up to us and we in turn passed it along to Dan Brouthers, who has been a good bit closer to ringside and who should know.

Daniel has been on some fair infields himself. He hit .419 for the old Detroit clan of 1887 with a quartet embracing Brouthers, Richardson, Rowe and White. He hit .344 for the Baltimore infield of 1894, which embraced Brouthers, Reitz, Jennings and McGraw. He has played on the best and has seen the others pass in parade before him year after year.

"Why," commented Big Dan, "a choice between the Cubs and Athletics for the greatest infield? They were both good, and the Athletics are still in harness. But neither ranks as the best—not for me when I think of that Boston infield of 1897, with Fred Tenney at first, Bobby Lowe at second, Herman Long at short and Jimmy Collins at third.

"This is the one greatest infield of the game—the best combination of batting and fielding power, brains, speed and smoothness. It has them all beaten, and I doubt if its equal will ever be gathered together again. There wasn't an angle of the game at which they were not stars. All four batted above .315, with fielding averages around .950. They worked without a slip—without a break—and in all the time I watched them play I never saw even a touch of bonehead work. There was no angle of the game at which all four were not stars. They may have had no more power than the Athletics' four and but little more smoothness than the Cubs, but in the combination of all things that go to make up a perfect infield machine they must be set out in front of the others with something to spare. Tenney, Lowe, Long and Collins—ask any one who saw this four in their prime whether or not I'm right?"—Grantland Rice in Collier's Weekly.

NAVIGATION NEVER OPEN AS LATE IN HISTORY OF RIVER

QUEBEC, Dec. 19.—Navigation on the river will close later this year than ever before in the history of the St. Lawrence. There are still some fifteen large ocean vessels to come down from Montreal and the lakes, and it is not expected the last will leave Quebec for the open sea before January.

Specks Floating Before His Eyes

When specks start to float before the eyes, when everything turns black for a few seconds and you feel as if you were going to faint, you may rest assured that your liver is not working properly.

The essential thing to do in all cases where the liver is slow, lazy or torpid, is to stir it up by the use of a medicine that will clear away all the waste and poisonous matter from the system, and prevent as well as cure all the troubles arising from this accumulated mass which has collected in the system.

Keep the bowels open by using Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills and you will have no liver trouble of any kind. They will clear away all the waste and effette matter which has collected and make the liver active and working properly.

Mr. John R. Morrison, Grand River Falls, N.S., writes: "Several months ago I was troubled with a sour stomach, and had specks floating before my eyes. I took five vials of Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills which cured and cleaned my blood before any length of time. I told my friends about it and they got some, and they, too, find themselves different since they took them. I recommend your pills very highly."

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills are 25c a vial at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

RUNNING AWAY FROM BOB

A Flight That Failed.

By ETHEL FOWLER.

With its expiring chug Janet steered the runabout into a convenient lane, puttered over it a bit, then dropped all useless effort to revitalize it. How many miles she was from her destination or her home she had no idea. It mattered little whether it was one or a thousand, she was anchored to stay as far as the machine was concerned.

She had set out with more haste than discretion and had left undone things that should have been done in preparation for so long a run; also she had neglected to take along other things that should have been taken in case of the emergency which was sure to present itself.

Emergency without recourse is never pleasant. Janet felt it almost tragic. It portended the failure of her undertaking. Intended to impress and subdue her family and—some others. Was it to end in this silly little fiasco? Never!

She set her teeth with determination and went down the road to reconnoiter. Nothing in sight either way. She climbed a large rock pile at the roadside and gazed long and intently in the direction of her destination, as if to materialize in the near distance the factory village whence she had meant to speed away on the prosaic but reliable railway.

She finally persuaded herself that she perceived spires and chimneys upon the blank horizon and with more determination returned to the car, gathered up her suit case, lunch box, raincoat and umbrella and set out to finish the journey with her small, fashionably shod feet.

Panting under her load, she eventually reached the rock pile, rested her remonstrating, aching little person a half hour and meekly, with great disgust, plodded back to the runabout as to a city of refuge.

When she packed so large a part of her personal belongings she had not considered the possibility of transporting it by main strength like a bod carrier.

She could abandon the treacherous car, but not her plumage. One cannot make a creditable entrance into a strange country without suitable adornment and she felt that her future largely depended upon the impression her unknown relatives received of her at meeting.

Therefore she resigned herself to await the passing of a good Samaritan, hoping devoutly he would be possessed of a large touring car and tow her into port.

This was entirely a matter of chance, though, with the probabilities against it, as she had purposely chosen an unfrequented way to avoid the auto party she had deserted.

She kicked her heels and reflected upon her position with anger and self pity. Bob would go, of course, in his big new machine and equally, of course, he would go for her—he could not avoid that—in spite of her emphatic refusal to accompany him.

Her refusal counted for little or his reluctance either, with both families continually flinging them at each other in the most barefaced manner.

Her father had come home beaming the night before and informed her that Bob would be on hand, as he had taken pains to explain that she (Janet) was expecting him as usual, the refusal being a mere bit of feminine coquetry and her mother had laughingly added that she had met the young fellow that afternoon looking very despondent and had cheered him up by remarking that Janet never meant half what she said and would be disappointed if he failed to come for her.

And, to crown all, Bob's mother had run in and assured her—as if she demanded such assurance—that Bob would be around early, as she had reminded him that Janet expected him to take her as usual.

"'As usual!'" Janet quoted vindictively. "The poor fellow couldn't get rid of me if he tried, as I am sure he has sometimes!" She was not at all sure of this. "They'd push us to the very altar without a word from either of us as to willingness, and if I objected and Bob hung back they'd 'explain' and 'assure' and force me upon him. I just had to run away to relieve him. Though I haven't got far yet—I will! Some one will come along."

Some one did a few moments later—a man on horseback from the little town told her civilly that if she was there when he went back he'd send some one out for her, though it might be dark and it would cost her considerable.

"So much, maybe, that I'd not have enough left for my fare and just have to sneak back home. You wretched good for nothing failure!" She jammed and rattled everything with handles and cried heartily.

After which she felt better, wiped up, powdered her shiny nose and prepared to make a melting appeal to the next passer, be who or what he might. Then she let out a screech of joy, for suddenly the panting chug of a heavy car smote the distance. Her troubles were at an end! Never an autoist so mean as to refuse aid to a stranded brother—or sister.

The approaching rumble bespoke the large car of her hopes, and she hastily assumed her most attractive manner and helpless look of appeal; then, fearing that the speed which it was evi-

Large doses of pills for the liver are not as efficient as small doses.

The big dose purges its way through the system fast, but does not cleanse thoroughly.

The small dose (if right) acts gently on the liver, and gives it just the slight help it needs to do its own work, and do it well.

Take one pill regularly, until you know you are all right.

Caribou.

Migrating caribou along the Yukon river near the American-Canadian border were so thick during the first week of October that the United States Government steamboat Gen. Jeff Davis had difficulty in navigating among the animals swimming in the river. Thousands swarmed the shores and waters. Members of the crew said they lassooed a dozen and hauled them aboard for fresh meat.

Prisoners In Germany.

The conclusion of an armistice between the Entente Allies and the Central Powers means the liberation of Canadians held as prisoners-of-war. In the neighborhood of 2,800 Canadian soldiers have been taken by the enemy since the outbreak of war. Of these a few have escaped, some have been repatriated by exchange, or have been interned in Switzerland, and some have died in captivity. The great majority of the 2,800, however, were in German prison camps; few, if any, are held by Austria.

Rules for Hunters.

Game conservation is a vital question in Canada. The time to act and place upon a sound and sane continuing basis all game birds and animals is now. Insofar as rules for sportsmen are concerned, they will obey them. Here are a few good ones:

1. Be a real sportsman. There is more honor in giving the game a square deal than in getting the limit.

2. Make sure it's a buck or drake. If you can't see his horns, or determine a duck, she hasn't got any, and in case of a duck don't shoot.

3. Help enforce the game law. Game and fish are public property, and only a game-hog will take more than his fair and legal share. Violations should be reported to the nearest official of the Government.

4. Respect the [illegible] property. He regards the man who leaves his gates open, cuts his fences, chouses his live stock, or shoots near dwellings as an outlaw. Put yourself in his place.

5. Be careful with your camp fire and matches. Save the forests. One tree will make a million matches; one match can burn a million trees.

6. Leave a clean camp and a clean record. Unburied garbage, crippled game, and broken laws are poor monuments for a sportsman to leave behind him.

Children Lost In Big City.

Two children, a ten-year-old girl and her seven-year-old brother, disappeared from their home in Toronto recently and were not found by the police until the third morning after they had left their home to go to school. The tots wandered down to Scarboro Beach, where they spent the afternoon, and afterwards managed to reach Yonge street, where the police found them.

"We wanted to see Santa Claus, and we saw him," said the little girl.

For two nights they had slept behind the big pillars of a bank. They spent the day-time in the downtown stores.

The Wonders of Observation.

Long ago a keen observer of humanity recorded his discovery that a small borrower never leaves the bank without glancing one way and moving off in the contra direction. A rival observer has just turned up in the Christian Science Monitor to report his conclusion, after years of patient observation, that a brass band and a small boy never move in opposite directions.

"Phonola" REGISTERED

And the tone control pipes are used in our magnificent "Organola" model—the utmost that has so far been achieved in phonograph construction.

Records played on this "Organola" Model are given a really wonderful reproduction. Play a "sextette" record on the "Organola" Model, and you will have a real idea of the value of the tone control pipes. There is none of that confused blurring as when played on ordinary makes of phonograph, the tone control pipes of the "Organola" Model separating the different voices and notes, giving a pure, clear, lifelike rendition.

Try a record of a violin, a piano, a soprano, or anything else you know the ordinary phonograph does not quite reproduce faithfully, and you will find that the "Organola" Model renders the selection perfectly and with a surprising volume.

If you are going to invest upwards of $250 in a phonograph, you will, of course, want to procure the finest that is built. So, if you cannot see and hear the "Organola" Mode of the "Phonola" at a dealer's in your locality, write direct to us.

BILLION IN WAR STAMPS.

Year's Total Near That Mark— New Issue Begins on Jan. 1

WASHINGTON, The program for sale of war savings stamps in 1919, announced by the Treasury, is almost identical with that followed this year, as relating to cost of the stamps in various months. In January the stamps worth $5 face value will be sold for $4.12, and will increase 1 cent a month until next December. They will not mature until Jan. 1, 1924, or one year later than the stamps now on sale.

Thrift stamps costing 25 cents each will be sold throughout the year. They will be identical in design and size with the present thrift stamps but will be blue instead of green. The war savings stamps, also blue, are considerably smaller, than the present issue.

New cards on which war savings stamps are to be attached will be issued and 1919 stamps should not be attached to old cards. If a war savings certificate has been only partly filled with this year's war savings stamps, it will be entirely valid and may be redeemed eventually at the maturity value of the stamps it bears.

The new stamps will go on sale Jan. 1.

Indications now are that the sale war savings stamps this year will be about a billion dollars, as $930,000,000 in sales have been reported to date and belated reports after Jan 1 are expected to swell this considerably.

War savings agents, the Treasury has announced, should exchange their old stamps for those of the new issue between Jan. 1 and 10, but if this is neglected until after Jan. 10, old stamps may be affixed to cards and redeemed at Post Offices.

CHOCOLATE AND COCOA

The Soldiers' Favorites.

Should consumers pay more for Chocolate and Cocoa if the threatened shortage of raw material is artificially created?

Peculiar conditions exist today in the Cocoa and Chocolate industry.

All during the war Cocoa and Chocolate have been in the highest favor and justly so on account of their great food value, and the boys in all branches of the service have consumed enormous quantities.

In spite of numerous difficulties, chief among them the shortage of sugar, manufacturers' prices on their standard brands of Cocoa and Chocolate have not been advanced.

Now, owing to a regulation that the manufacturers shall be allowed to purchase only 64 per cent of their normal amount of raw cocoa, it would seem that an advance in prices would be necessary if this 64 per cent restriction should be allowed to remain in force long enough to create an artificial shortage.

The men in uniform on their return home would find themselves obliged to pay more for their favorite confection than they did abroad.

This is in face of the allegation that there are many vessels in United States ports waiting only for the guarantees of return cargoes, to sail for South America where there is an abundance of cocoa awaiting shipment if our manufacturers are only allowed to buy it.

SELL NO GERMAN GOODS.

More Than 700 Stores Said to Have Joined the Boycott.

NEW YORK.—More than 700 stores in New York have agreed not to sell German-made goods and are displaying "No German-made Goods Sold Here" signs, it was announced by the Women's National Committee of the American National Defence Society, of which Mrs. McAllister Smith is the head.

"James McCreery & Co., Best & Co., and Lord & Taylor are among the larger stores displaying the signs, but we have not concentrated on the big stores only," said Mrs. Smith. "We have obtained the co-operation of smaller stores throughout the city. The stores in the neighbourhood of 125th Street have been thoroughly canvassed and the greater number are displaying the signs. The Broadway Association has written us that they are heartily in accord with the movement of the society to boycott German-made goods and stand ready to aid us in every way possible."

German-made toys will come up for discussion at the annual convention of the Toy Manufacturers of the United States which is being held this week.

TOO CLEAR A CASE.

So the Judge Decided It Was Useless to Go On.

"When did your husband begin treating you cruelly?" asked her lawyer.

"It was about a year ago," replied the pretty petitioner.

"What happened?"

"We were on our way to New York."

"Yes. Did he strike you?"

"No. I asked him to get a drawing room, so that I would not have to undress in my berth."

"And he refused?"

"Yes. He said his mother had never occupied a drawing room in a sleeping car and he didn't consider me any better than his mother."

"Was that the only time he ever was cruel to you?"

"No. After I had bought my fall clothes last year they were so fine that I couldn't ride in a public conveyance without ruining them, and when I explained to him that he would have to buy an electric to save my clothes he told me to go ahead and ruin the clothes and get the kind that could be worn in street cars next time."

"It will be useless to go on with the case," the judge interposed. "There is no doubt that the man is absolutely heartless."—Chicago Record-Herald.

How He Worked It.

Her hat obscured his view at the theater, and in kindly voice he leaned forward and asked if it would be possible for her to remove it.

A stiffening of the head was her only answer. After a few moments he repeated his request. Then she turned on him.

"There is no demand for my doin' so," she said.

"No demand?" he echoed.

Then he rolled his overcoat and placed it on his seat, sat on it and, getting his hat from under the seat, placed it on his head.

In a moment there was a cry of "Take that hat off!"

And with a swift movement the lady unfastened her hatpins and removed her hat. So did the man.—Exchange.

A Definition.

Three ladies had planned a drive together, but when the hour appointed came one of them asked to be excused on the score of an attack of indigestion. Her companions expressed their disappointment and sympathy, but the elder of them insisted that the excuse was insufficient.

"You shouldn't let yourself be governed by such ideas," she said. "It is really all as you think. What is indigestion, anyway?"

The third lady, wishing to avoid the apparently impending discussion on mental control of illness, broke in quickly:

"Indigestion," she said, "is the failure to adjust a square meal to a round stomach."—Harper's.

In Boston.

"Come here, Clarence," said the Boston mother. "I feel that I must chastise you. What have you to say for yourself?"

"Well, mother, it is a matter of no difference to me," replied the precocious five-year-old. "Too violent exercise, however, might prove detrimental to your health, and you and father might submit the matter to consultation."—Florida Times-Union.

APOSTLE OF ALASKA.

Remarkable Career of Wm. Duncan, Founder of Metlakatla.

With the death of "Father" William Duncan at Metlakatla, Alaska, a few days ago, there passed from the stage one of the unique figures of the world. Born eighty-six years ago in Beverly, England, of Scotch parentage, the self-styled "Apostle of Alaska" began his business life as a commercial traveler, but decided in 1857 to take up missionary work. That he was successful is attested by the colony that exists to-day on Annette Island, made up entirely of the descendants of Indians who were cannibals when "Father" Duncan went among them. There are even some of the original members of the colony still living on the island and practicing the arts of peace near where they performed the rites of superstition and savagery in their youth.

The story of "Father" Duncan's life is a romance of sacrifice and achievement. When he decided to become a missionary he was sent by the Church of England to Port Simpson, British Columbia. There he remained long enough to learn the Indian language, beginning to preach to the natives as soon as he had acquired the first smattering of their tongue. Later, with sixty followers, he founded a village, which he called Metlakatla. The colony of which the village was the centre flourished but trouble with the Hudson Bay Company, which culminated in a bishop being sent out from England to take charge of the church, determined Duncan to leave Canada. In the early '80s he went to the United States and obtained a promise of sufficient land for his colony over the line in Alaska.

The Canadians refused to allow the Indians to remove any of their property from the country, so a new village of Metlakatla was built and equipped throughout. The rebuilding began in October, and in December, when a church and enough houses to shelter the people had been erected, the colonists gathered and swore allegiance to the American Government. Incidentally, they ceased to be members of the Church of England and became Presbyterians.

The village prospered and in the course of time became one of the most important in Alaska. Its population grew to about one thousand and the well-constructed, painted dwellings bore witness to the Indian's ability when properly trained. For many years the village contained no horses or wagons and the streets consisted of wide board sidewalks along which the inhabitants walked or rode bicycles, of which there were many in the colony.

The largest church in Alaska was at Metlakatla, as was also the largest library in the territory. A cannery employed 150 men and packed 10,000 cases of salmon yearly and the village store carried a stock valued at $25,000. The Metlakatla Brass Band was one of the most famous organizations of native musicians ever formed among the Indians. It toured the United States a few years ago and attracted much attention.

"Father" Duncan was very jealous of his colony and ruled it as a king. He made the laws and executed them. Among the rules he enforced from the beginning was the prohibition of marriage between his Indians and the whites, with the result that to-day virtually all of the members of the colony are pure bloods. In fact, white people have never been welcome for any purpose on the island, which is about thirty miles long and eight or ten wide. It is said to be rich in minerals, but prospectors have not made much headway in investigating its resources.

The attention of the United States was attracted to the colony a few years ago by a dispute that arose between "Father" Duncan and the U. S. Department of Education over who should have authority in the education of the natives. The efforts of the Government officials were bitterly resisted and a serious fight seemed imminent. A settlement was finally effected and the king remained till his death ruler over the colony he had founded.

FRIEND OF THE FAT MEN.

This Doctor Tells How They May Reduce Their Too Solid Flesh.

The latest remedy for obesity has been set forth by Dr. Galish, a German physician. He claims one of the main causes for an increase of weight is the late dinner hour. Food taken in the evening and then followed by the repose of the night is the best thing in the world for forming of adipose tissue, and those who lament their increasing weight should stop that particular form of pleasure the first thing.

His treatment in a dietary is as follows: In the morning the patient must take a cup of tea with buttered toast, and if he is too hungry to wait for luncheon he may take an egg and some bread and butter at 10 o'clock. At 1 o'clock the meal consists of meat, vegetables, salad and a little compote; in the afternoon some coffee with a little white bread and butter. And in the evening there is only a small piece of bread and butter.

For the first two or three days the patient will feel extremely hungry in the evening, but this soon passes off, and he gets into the habit of eating more at the first two meals, this being counteracted by exercise in the afternoon.

It is claimed for Mr. Galish that his patients lose one or two pounds a week. —Chicago Tribune.

TOOK BRONCHITIS AFTER THE MEASLES

Measles is a disease that is very hard on children, and it generally leaves the system in such a debilitated condition that it is liable to attacks of some other trouble. One of the most common of these is bronchitis, which starts with a short, painful, dry cough, a feeling of tightness through the chest and difficulty of breathing, accompanied by a wheezing sound from the lungs.

There is a raising of phlegm from the bronchial tubes which is very often streaked with blood.

Bronchitis although not really dangerous, should never be neglected as some serious lung trouble is most liable to follow if it is.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup will loosen the phlegm, soothe and heal the irritated bronchial tubes, and in a short time the bronchitis will disappear.

Mrs. Murdock McLean, Adanac Apts., Winnipeg, Man., writes: — "About two years ago my little girl had bronchitis; took them after having the measles. I tried several cough remedies, and oils of all kinds, but they all failed. At last I got Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. After using three bottles she has never had any sign of it since. I can honestly recommend it as being a grand medicine."

The genuine Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25c. and 50c. Manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Bridge Tenders Exceed the Original Amount Voted by Ratepayers

Lowest Tender Was a Hundred Thousand Dollars Wide of the Mark—Problem for New Council.

CHEQUES RETURNED

The responsibility for building the proposed overhead bridge on Hunter Street will devolve upon the 1919 Council as a result of a resolution that was adopted last evening by the existing Council. The meeting was called to consider the tenders for the proposed bridge and when it was found that lowest tenderer was nearly one hundred thousand dollars in excess of the original amount of $245,000 voted by the people for this work, the Aldermen threw up their hands and committed the work in the form of a legacy to next year's Council.

The following tenders were received:

R. Sheehy $381,474.25
John O'Toole, Ottawa $351,710.50
Canadian Engineering and Contracting Co. $337,338.50

Excess the Amount

The amount voted by the rate-payers for this work a little over a year ago when the agreement between the City and the Quaker Oats Company was executed was $245,000. Unless the Government provides the difference the Council will have to submit another by-law to the people for the extra sum of money needed for the work.

Mr. Frank Barber the designing engineer for the proposed new structure was present at the meeting last evening and explained a number of technical details to the Council. Mr. Barber said that the tenders submitted could not be taken as a lump sum bid as it might be necessary to make a number of changes. If the proposed ramp to be constructed at the west end of the bridge was dispensed with as it might be by the concrete and fill could be deducted from unit prices which would represent a deduction of about $12,000. The difference in any case would not be sufficient to alter the relative position of the three tenders.

Will Return Checks

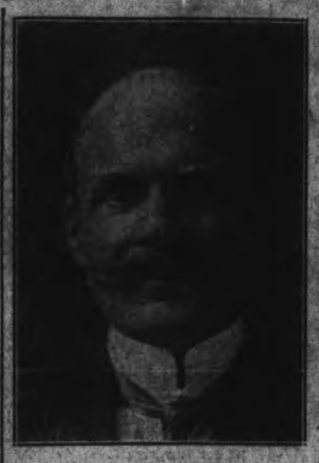
Mr. Barber pointed out that Mr. O'Toole's tender was somewhat irregular in that it included the guarantee bond amount to a couple of thousand dollars and the tenderer required two years in which to construct the bridge, whereas the other two tenderers contracted to build the bridge in one year. The penalty of overtime in the matter of completion of the work amounts to forty dollars a day.

The higher cost of materials and the added length and width of the proposed new bridge were given as two of the chief reasons for the increased cost above the original estimate. The contingency fund provided by the contractors in their tenders ranged from eleven thousand to sixty thousand dollars.

It was finally moved by Ald. Langford and seconded by Ald Saunders that the matter be left over for the new Council to deal with and that the fifteen thousand dollars deposit cheques be returned to the tenderers.

Will Be Busy Year.

Ald. Malcolm McIntyre and other members of the City Council who are familiar with matters pertaining to contracting were of the opinion that now would be a good time to commence the construction of the bridge as in six or eight months from now it would be more difficult to secure labour and material owing to the large quantity of work that will be under way all over the country. Mr. Barber said that contractors throughout the province whom he had been in contact with in connection with the tenders for the proposed bridge expressed similar opinions About ten contractors figured on the structure but only three put in a tender. Some of the contractors had other work in view such as canal construction and were afraid of taking on too much work.



MR. ALEX. MURRAY

He is a candidate for the City Council, having been one of the four men endorsed by the Trades and Labour Council for the aldermanic contest. Mr. Murray is a member of the Machinists' Union.

Will Not Be Candidates

Ald. A. Weir and Ald. Malcolm McIntyre Are Retiring.

Ald. A. Weir and Ald. Malcolm McIntyre have both announced their intention of retiring from public life. Ald. Weir states that his health will not permit him to give the time and attention that the duties of an alderman demands. Both men have given the city excellent service and their retirement from municipal activity will make it necessary for the city to look to new men to fill their places who in all probability will lack the experience that is essential for the successful performance of the duties involved.

Mr. J. J. Hartley also states that he will not be a candidate for election to the office of Utilities Commissioner. There is every reason to believe that Mr. Moore K. C. will be unopposed in this field. Ald. Langford who one week ago definitely announced his retirement from the Council is reconsidering his decision and will likely offer himself for re-election.

Paris is Gay and Santa Claus Is Ruling Spirit

Parisians Are Making the Most of Their Right to be Gay.

William Philip Simms.
(United Press.)

PARIS, Dec. 21.— Allied diplomats caught in the backwash of the Christmas tide, are "carrying on" with unofficial pourparlers until 1919.

Packed with the most distinguished gathering in its history, Paris has joyously capitulated to the holiday spirit. Big Berthas and Gothas belong to the stone age. Santa Claus is premier.

The city is illuminated by night and gay with bunting by day. The victory flag has been added to the usual Christmas decorations. Shops are stuffed with the most fascinating and costly of women's bedizenments. Jewelers display the richest geegaws ever seen here. Restaurants, expensive and gay, are overflowing. The boulevards hold the greatest throngs since the exposition. Temporary toy booths line the sidewalks. Merchants are hawking mistletoe, holly and evergreen. Fakirs are vending kamerading rubber Kaisers and capitulating Huns. Topical songs regarding President Wilson and Premier Clemenceau are being sung in the theatres and music halls, where S.R.O. (standing room only) signs are common. The people appear to have totally forgotten the war. So far as they are concerned, peace is already signed.

The uninterrupted succession of emperors, kings, presidents and princes has become as spectacular as part of a colossal carnival.

Parisians by their four years of terrible sacrifices have earned the right to be gay. And they are making the most of that right.

ENTERTAINMENT

The "Evening Messenger," Valparaiso, Ind., has the following press comment regarding Lieut. H. Gordon Manning, who will give his lecture in George street Methodist church on Friday, Dec. 27th, 1918:

"A very large and appreciative audience greeted Lieut. H. Gordon Manning at the Wheeler M. E. church last evening, when he gave his splendid and interesting lecture on "The War From an Officer's Viewpoint." He held the attention of his hearers from the moment he started until he closed and painted a very vivid picture of the war as it really is, using as illustrations several trophies brought from the front. His descriptions were so perfect that one felt that they had been there."

THE REPORT IS DENIED

Sinking of the Surrendered German Fleet Has Not Been Advocated by American Commissioners.

SHIPPING SITUATION

By Fred S. Ferguson.
(United Press.)

PARIS, Dec. 21.— The report that the American Commissioners had decided to advocate the sinking of the surrendered German fleet is "pure bunk," a high authority informed the United Press to-day.

Submitting suggestions regarding the German fleet, or guessing how it will be disposed of are among the favourite pastimes here at present. The same applies to the disposition of the former Kaiser.

As a matter of fact, nothing in regard to either has been decided upon yet. A great number of proposals have been received, but they have not yet even been considered.

The American Commissioners certainly have arrived at no decision regarding the general shipping situation. Several angles were expected to be taken up to-day, however, when Edward Hurley met representatives of Great Britain, France and Italy.

Mass of the Germans to Blame for Crimes

Merely Add to Their Turpitude by Trying to Shift Blame.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—In discussing the attempts of the present leaders to shift the blame for the war and the manner in which it was waged, the Times in an editorial says:

"The majority of articulate Germans altogether refuse to confess that Germany has been guilty of any particular crime. They deny that she has been defeated and represent her as the innocent victim of unheard of persecution since the conclusion of the armistice.

"The mass of the German people were in fact accomplices in the crimes of militarism. They hounded on the former Emperor, his generals and statesmen until defeat fell upon them. They would do better to confess the truth. They merely add to their turpitude by trying to shelter themselves by trying to shelter plea that the great German people did not know of the crimes of their rulers."

ADVANCE SKIRMISHES

Great Britrin is Willing to Go As Far As Possible to Meet Wilson's View.

THE SEA LAWS

(By E. L. Keen.)
(United Press Service.)

PARIS, Dec. 21.—Great Britain is willing to go as far as possible to meet President Wilson's point of view regarding "freedom of the seas," according to the advanced skirmishes of the British peace delegation.

They say that Great Britain is fully cognizant of the necessity for revising the antiquated sea laws, but they point out that any such revision must be consistent with Great Britain's insular position which they believe Wilson himself will agree requires special consideration and safeguards.

These Britishers who, while not officials, are high in the councils of the Empire, are giving the impression that Anglo-American differences regarding "freedom of the seas" and other Wilsonian principles are not fundamental and most-likely will be reconciled when the President and Premier Lloyd George have the opportunity for a direct exchange of opinions about details. The greatest regret is expressed by the unofficial diplomats that the Lloyd George conference with Wilson has been delayed, inasmuch as the French are busy utilizing every opportunity to cultivate the President and the American delegation. They express some apprehension that Wilson, because of his lack of direct knowledge, will acquire erroneous impressions regarding the British attitude.

The Indemnities.

In regard to indemnities even Lloyd George's closest friends admit he went much farther in the heat of the election campaign than he himself intended. He is said to be prepared to advocate a cooler atmosphere at the Quai D'Orsay (French Foreign Office).

On the other hand, it is known that Wilson himself is somewhat embarrassed owing to the delays he has experienced in getting into immediate touch with the British leaders. He would have much preferred informal conferences with them and the French together for the purpose of a proper comparison and co-ordination of views. He is also extremely anxious to complete all this preliminary work as soon as possible and be ready for the formal Inter-Allied Conference, which is expected to begin the first week in January. He wants to give the conference his undivided attention, when once it starts.

Russian Situation is Causing Much Anxiety Among Allied Nations

Controversy Regarding the Continued Presence of Allied Forces in Russia is Rapidly Involving Everyone in the Empire—Government is Asked to Define Its Plans.

By Lowell Mellett
(United Press.)

LONDON, Dec. 21.—President Wilson, arriving here immediately after Christmas, will be urged by Liberal leaders to define his attitude toward Russia.

Many officials regard the Russian situation as one of the most important problems now confronting the world.

The belief is expressed that inasmuch as the President probably will publicly discuss the freedom of the seas, and the League of Nations, he should also explicitly definie another of his fourteen principles, self determination, and its application to Russia. Such action on his part, it is believed, certainly will clarify the situation.

The controversy regarding continued presence of Allied forces in Russia is rapidly involving everyone in the Empire with any pretence of political opinion. It has been given fresh impetus by rumours that the British government plans to send a great expedition to occupy Petrograd, Moscow and other centres this winter.

Oppose Further Action.

Even the Liberal newspapers, including Premier Lloyd George's personal organ, the Chronicle, indicate they will bitterly oppose any plan contemplating further military acts against Russia.

Opinion is believed here as to the thoroughness of Lord Milner's explanation of the Government's attitude toward Russia, that the Allied armies must remain to prevent the spread of "barbarism" throughout the country and to protect the majority of the Russian people from the Bolsheviki.

In some quarters the War Secretary's attempt is accepted without reserve, but a number of newspapers and civilian groups maintain that the Government should at once clearly define its plan of campaign in Russia and "make it evident that we are not pursuing illegitimate ends."

City Asked to Proceed With Sewage Disposal Plant

Adjacent Townships Object to the Sewage Going Into the Otonabee River—Council Meeting.

Last evening the Council received a letter from the law firm of Peck, Kerr and McElderry, representing townships adjacent to the city, asking the city to proceed at once with the construction of a sewage disposal plant or some other means of treating the sewage other than dumping it in the river. The letter pointed out that the work was first contemplated in 1912 but for the past two or three years had been delayed on account of the war.

It was decided to leave the matter over for the 1919 Council to deal with.

The Council endorsed a resolution emanating from Toronto in which the Provincial Government is to be asked to remove the Provincial war tax of one mill on the dollar. On motion of Ald. Dobbin and Ald. Weir a similar resolution will be forwarded from the municipality

War Trophies.

It was moved by Ald. Edgar and seconded by Ald. Dobbin that the city ask the authorities to provide Peterboro with some suitable war trophies such as captured guns.

Ald. Weir intimated that the former Kaiser would be acceptable.

A motion to collect the sum of $112 from either the Canadian General Electric Company or Mr. J. Hayes, contractor for the Company, was moved and seconded by Ald. Weir and Ald. M. McIntyre respectively. The amount represents the rental of a hoist and boiler during the construction of the addition to office of the Company's plant.

More Light.

An electric light will be placed over the gallery in the Council chamber so as to enable the ratepayers to see where the oratory is coming from at the nominations on Monday evening. The large Victory Loan flag which the caretaker of the building has hung on the north wall of the sanctum like a moving picture screen will be turned over to the J. J. Turner Company for better treatment in the way of draping.

A resolution of condolence was extended to Ald. A. A. McIntyre, whose son, Cadet Sidney McIntyre of the Royal Air Force passed away a few days ago.

At the meeting of the Board of Works which preceded the Council meeting Ald. Weir, chairman of the Committee was extended a vote of thanks by the members of the Council for the able manner in which he has performed the arduous duties connected with the office.

MAY VISIT THE STATES

Large Part of British Fleet May be Seen in American Waters.

VISIT CANADA

(Special to Examiner.)

LONDON, Dec. 21. — It is reported that the Admiralty views favorably the suggestion that a large part of the British fleet, commanded by Admiral Sir David Beatty, should visit the United States. It is asserted, however that no date for the visit has been fixed, but it is understood that it will be made immediately after peace has been signed. Subsequently the fleet will make a tour of the British Dominions.

The War Cabinet and the Admiralty, on the suggestion of the Ministers of the Dominions, have decided that Admiral Viscount Jellicoe, the former chief of the naval staff, shall visit the Dominions and India in February, to advise the respective autorities on naval matters.

It is probable that the Prince of Wales may make his announced tour at the same time.

UNEASINESS HAS BEEN RELIEVED

Borden May Remain in London for the Holiday.

(By J. F. B. Livesay, Canadian Press Correspondent.)

LONDON, Dec. 21.—Without doubt, the announcement of President Wilson's immediate visit to London has greatly relieved the uneasiness of the British people, for it is felt that his dramatic change of plans can only mean that he comes as a friend bent on maintaining Anglo-Saxon unity rather than farther widening the already dangerous divergencies of the policy regarding sea-power. Canada occupies a position both happy and responsible, of being able to interpret to either party what may seem foreign and even obscure in the language of the other, and therefore it is not surprising that Borden will remain in London, abandoning the Christmas foregatherings he had promised himself with the Canadian Corps. It is useless to disguise the fact that grave anxiety as to Anglo-American negotiations in connection with the freedom of the seas, threatened to cast a shadow over the holiday.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

SATURDAY, DEC. 21ST, 1918.

THE OLD TACTICS.

The extent to which the Ontario Government has become alarmed at the growth and increasing power of the United Farmers of Ontario was unfistakably indicated by the addresses made by speakers at the Conservative Convention to select a candidate for the provincial bye-election in North Ontario. The candidate, Major R. H. Cameron, an officer of the 116th Battalion, who served in France, and undoubtedly selected because of the belief that that service may appeal to the sentiment of the people—the usual flag-waving tactics of the Conservative organizations—tries to weaken the farmers' movement by driving the wedge of party politics into the ranks of the United Farmers. "The whole platform of the United Farmers," remarked Major Cameron, "is nothing more or less than a pro-Laurier policy." The attempt to alienate the Conservative members of the farmers' organization is not even camouflaged—the old tactaics of trying to split the farmers' vote by waving the party banner are openly adopted. From the tone of the speeches at the Toronto Convention Major Cameron will have to find a more potent plan than the campaign methods of old. However, his address is a clear proof of the growing fear of the farmers among the Queen's Park legislators—a fear that is by no means ill-founded in view of recent by-election results.

MEASURE UP TO THE SOLDIERS.

The young Canadians who felt the call of duty overseas did not go into the war-game with his eyes shut. Before him he knew there was suffering, hardships, pain, a possibility of being maimed for life, the sacrifice of his prospects at home, the chance that he might be called upon to give up his life. He realized all these things and fully conscious of what they signified, he went forth to battle.

There is a similar call in Peterborough at the present moment—the call to useful citizens to take their part in the civic management. As in the case of the soldier there are difficulties ahead—nothing approaching in intensity those that confronted the members of Canada's army, but nevertheless there are difficulties—and men who might have a splendid share in the development of Petermorough are hesitating on that account to become candidates. They see the need but because election to the aldermanic board might mean personal inconvenience and self-sacrifice they are reluctant to become candidates.

To these citizens the example set by the young soldiers of Peterborough is commended. The difficulties and discomforts they willingly encountered that they might serve their country were infinitely greater than anything that lies before the prospective aldermen. At this time when the need of good men in the council is so great, the people of Peterborough have a right to expect of the citizens who have the ability to serve that they measure up to the standard of the city's fighting men.

PARTNERS—NOT EMPLOYEES.

The experiment which has been launched by the Imperial Oil Company to inaugurate an industrial republic formed by the company and its employees, will be watched with interest. It is the first attempt at an industrial relationship plan in any lyarge industry in Canada — an attempt inspired according to Hon. W. J. Hanna, the president of the company "by the lesson of the brotherhood of the battlefield." There are many innovations in connection with the scheme. Questions as to the numeration and general treatment of the employees will be decided by joint conference between company and employee representatives, the latter to be elected by their comrades. No employee will be discharged without the right to appeal to a conference for a re-consideration of his case. On January 1st the company plans that every one who has been employed for one year shall become insured for an amount based on his earnings.

In February old-age pensions will be established so that when a man has reached the age of sixty-five years he will be in a position to retire, with an allowance sufficient to take care of himself and his family. This will be followed on the first of March by the inauguration of a sick benefit plan.

Hon. Mr. Hanna in announcing the details of the plan frankly admits that it has been adopted because it is good business.

"Our motive in establishing the labour relationship plan with its benefits to employees is not based on philantrophy," says the Imperial Oil Company's president. "This plan is purely a policy of business administration to promote continuity of effect and permanence of employment, to the end that replacement changes, one of the most serious menaces to the prosperity of capital and labour alike, is reduced to a minimum.

PLAIN TALK TO THE GERMANS.

The Germans have become callousedto the world's opinion and accept the epithets Boche and Hun without protest or apparent shame. But some of them may have felt compunctious twinges when they heard or read the remarks of General Fayolle on the ocasion of the entry of French troops tered them within the former palace into Mayence last Saturday. He ut- of the Duke of Hesse, and his hearers were the burghers and official representatives of the city.

General Fayolle told the German burghers that the war which their country had forced upon France was the most unjust and cruel humanity had ever known and described with dramatic emphasis, such as a French orator knows so well how to employ, some of the foul and wicked things which their generals and armies had done both in France and Belgium; how they had ravaged and laid waste village and village and town after town by fire and sword, and then acted like common thieves, carrying off to Germany household linen, furniture, treasures of antiquity, jewels, tools, machinery—anything on which they could lay their hands.

"That is not war," said General Fayolle, "It is robbery by armed forces. To-day in our country there are thousands of families homeless and without resources. Their land has been turned into a desert. That is a situation which the iniquity of your war has created and for which you will remain responsible. You have made terrorism 'a system of war." And then the General told them how such deeds had only hardened the spirit of resistance and hastened the victory of the French and their allies. He described to them the defeats of the German armies since July 15, the capture of thousands of guns, hundreds of thousands of prisoners and endless supplies, until the German army was shattered and had to beg for an armistice in order to avoid complete disaster.

The final sting in General Fayolle's remarks was when he told the German burghers that, while the French could not forget the wrongs inflicted on them by Germany, they would never make women and children responsible for them or destroy for the mere pleasure of causing damage, and that so long as they accepted loyally the conditions imposed by General Mangin, commanding the Tenth Army in Mayence, they need not fear for their persons or goods. The Germans may think themselves lucky to have in their midst foreign forces representing people who are faithful to the principles of justice and humanity. May they profit by the example. —New York Herald.

"EXPERIENCE" NOT EVERYTHING.

Among some of our citizens who have sat in the City Council from year to year there has grown a feeling that their experience gives them a first claim on civic positions. This conviction has perhaps been fostered by the indifference of the ratepayers who have elected these men without much thought as to their fitness or otherwise for places on the aldermanic board. The idea that because citizens have been chosen in this way in the past they should be returned to office at the coming elections, is one that will not hold water. Experience in municipal affairs, if it has been productive of ability, shrewdness and the willingness to serve the whole city to the best of one's capabilities should, of course, carry much weight with the electors and be a factor in the problems of choosing the best men. But years of service on the city's managing board, if they have not demonstrated the right qualities to be existent, should, on the other hand furnish a very good reason why the request of such men for another term should be answered in the negative. In fact, that a man has served in the Council is not enough—it should be demanded that he has served wisely and well, if he gives his experience as a reason why he should be re-elected.

In selecting next year's council the rate-payers of Peterboro should see that efficiency shall be the chief consideration. The time has come to cut away from old methods. The problems of the immediate future are too important to allow the system of the past to hold sway. Ald. Blank may be a good fellow and may have tried to see that his ward got as many electric lights and sidewalks as he could squeeze out of the estimates, but if Ald. Blank measured up to the service he should have rendered to the city falls below standard, his success in looking after his neighbors and his own popularity should not be allowed to induce the rate-payers to forget the fact that as a member of a board managing the affairs of a progressive city he has failed to meet the test.

This may seem an ungracious reward to men who have perhaps tried to work according to their views and their ability, for the best inerests of the city; but there should be little sentiment about such a plain matter-of-fact business transaction as the election of a city council. In other years it may not have been necessary, perhaps, to insist so much upon efficiency. The problems of the reconstruction period are bigger and more important than those that any other Peterboro Council has had to handle, which is exactly the reason that the Examiner has endeavoured to impress upon the citizens the urgent necessity of choosing a capable managing board for next year.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Monday's nominations are the most important in the history of Peterborough. Citizens generally should realize the necessity of paying considerable attention to the events of Monday.

The suggestion of an East City lady that the exterior of Peterborough's homes should be decorated with flags to mark the first peace Christmas after over four years of war, is worthy of attention.

The United Farmers of Ontario in adopting a policy of reciprocal free trade with the United States have not only gone as far as their brethren in the West but have left them far behind.

In view of Lord Milner's explanations of the Russian situation the story of the Canadian contingent in Siberia is likely to be a long one.

The view of the farmers that the Dominion Senate is beyond reform and should be buried is one that will find general favour—except with the members of the Senate.

45,000 Orphans From Influenza Epidemic

HARRISBURG, Pa., Dec. 20—The State Health Department announced to-day that in the neighbourhood of 45,000 orphans were created during the recent influenza epidemic, and that the death toll, still being taken in certain sections of the State, is daily adding to the list. Reports of new outbreaks of the disease were received yesterday by the department from several counties.

Spread in Detroit.

DETROIT, Dec. 17.—Spanish influenza has again reached an epidemic stage in many sections of Michigan, reports to the State Board of Health so far this week showing an average of a little more than 2,000 new cases developing daily. Yesterday the total reached 2,669 with 59 deaths.

Health officers have ordered an individual quarantine in the hope of checking the disease without resorting to a general closing order. Local authorities in a number of towns have forbidden public meetings and closed schools, churches and theatres.

Always flour your tins instead of greasing them. You will not then have soft pies.

CHANGES IN THE GROCERY MARKET

Substitute flour difficulties seem possible of solution, according to advices reaching the trade this week, says the Canadian Grocer. It is understood prices which will be paid for accumulation of substitute flours have been named and whereas in all cases these do not cover entire cost, it is further thought these will not result in serious losses to millers. The movement will have to be started soon, as it is said supplies must be assembled at seaboard for overseas shipment by February 15. Full details as to how business will be handed and prices to be paid are not yet available.

SALMON SITUATION

The salmon situation has finally been settled, it being understood that packers' figures for sockeye have been met and pinks accepted at slight reduction per case. The Canadian trade will receive no more than commandeer order called for, so best grade will be scarce before another pack is put up.

ADVANCES OF THE WEEK

The advances of the week are those made for paper bags, mince meat caustic, cod liver oil, cough syrup, maple sugar, tomatoes and cauliflower. There is a very firm undertone to the coffee market still, and white peppers are high and firm.

Among the declines made are those for peanut butter, mill feeds, and an easier an dunsettled feeling in some quarters for cereals. There have been no actual declines for the latter, however.

BEAN STOCKS

Bean and pea stocks are stated as very heavy, and the natural consequence is a softening of prices for these lines, particularly so as there is but a small and limited sale for them.

SUGAR SUPPLIES

Reports are better regarding the improvements looked for in sugar supplies. Canned goods are somewhat uncertain, and favorable prices are obtainable now on peas and tomatoes but corn is steady and firm. Peanuts of all kinds in the shell are particularly easy and may go lower.

The lifting of the restrictions in full by Jan. 1 is news welcomed by the trade as a whole. Conditions are such that more nearly normal busines operations may soon be expected to result, and the whole machinery of distribution on sugar operate smoothly.

LOWER PRICES

There have been some lower prices named on some grades of raisins as better supplies become available. A reduction of 15c per dozen has been made in some quarters on jelly powders, the removal of the restrictions on sugar, with better manufacturing conditions resulting being a factor.

Grapefruit has eased away slightly on the local market, with some ample supplies available. Oranges are in very good supply, with prices firmly held. Potatoes have stiffened, prices being up 10c per bag.

LIVE HOGS

A decline in live hogs of 25c per cwt. has been recorded this week. Some readjustments on cured meats to slightly lower levels are also reported, boneless backs and roll bacon coming down 1c per pound. Lard is somewhat unsettled, with a firmer market a possibility. Butter is up 1c per pound, and eggs 1c per dozen. With the exception of turkeys and ducks, a general easing away of buying prices on poultry of from 1to 2c per pound is reported.

War Was Flashed In Six Minutes to the Colonies

LONDON, —It required only six minutes to inform the British Empire that England was at war on the night of Aug. 4, 1914, says Lord Harcourt, who was then Colonial Secretary.

"On that unforgettable night," he said to the Empire Parliamentary Association, "I was in the Cabinet Room, Downing Street, with a few colleagues. Our eyes were on the clock, our thoughts on one subject only but there was a feeble effort to direct our conversation to other matters. We were waiting for a reply, which we knew full well would never come, to our ultimation to Berlin.

"When Big Ben struck 11:30—midnight in Berlin —we left the room knowing that the British Empire was at war.

"I crossed to the Colonial Office to send a war telegram to the whole of the British Empire. I asked the official in charge of that duty, how long it would take He said about six minutes'

"I asked him to return to my room when he had done his work. In seven minutes he was back and before morning I received a acknowledgement of my telegram from evedy single Colonial Protectorate, and even islet in the Pacific.

"So the grim machinery of war began revolving in perfect order and with perfect preparation because, more than two years previously, an individual war-book had been prepared by the Colonial Committee of Defence for every single Protectorate and island. It was at that moment locked in the safe of each Governor or Commissioner and they knew at once what to do."

SULLEN GREETING TO THE CANADIAN ARMY OF OCCUPATION

LONDON, December 19. — The farther we get into Germany, the more coldly polite is our reception, writes the Canadian Associated Press correspondent with the corps. Sullen looks are given generously. The men in some cases raise their hats to our officers and flags. The people on the whole are behaving tolerably well. Some are adopting an ingratiating attitude to Haig's proclamation to the inhabitants against imperilling the safety of the forces or their operations, which is posted in every town and village, and at all the cross roads.

"I have not seen much evidence of impoverishment among the civilians. Herds of cattle and live stock are around most of the farms. The stores are well stocked. I had a talk with a German wife of a merchant who speaks English fluently and had lived in England. She could not believe the Germans in 1915 crucified Canadians or sank hospital ships, and thoroughly accepted all the propaganda poured out from Berlin.

Canadian mails are arriving daily amongst the forces, bringing hundreds of Christmas gifts.

There is no securing a supply of skates and hockey sticks so the Canadians may not play hockey on the Rhine at this festival.

The Canadain cavalry brigade is not for the present proceeding as far as the Rhine, having stopped near Namur. The Strathconas are at Aische en Repul, the Dragoons at Grand Rosiere, the Fort Garrys, at Thorobaic Les Bequines, and th Horse Artillery at Mont St. Audie.

Any cooking vessel can be cleaned in half the time if it is first steamed Fill it with water, put the lid on and stand it where the water will get hot.

Peter Wright May Be Invited to Make Another Visit Here

There has been a suggestion that Councillor Peter Wright of the British Seamen's Union should be invited to return to Peterborough at an early date. It has been put forward both by citizens who heard his address on Thursday night, and also by those who for various reasons were not present. Mr. Wright carries a great message flowing directly out of the war, and it is felt that it should be disseminated as widely as possible. He is making a tour of the Empire and leaves shortly for the West and will thence sail for Australia. Hence if he is invited back to Peterborough there should be an early request forwarded to him. Peterborough owes more to Mr. Wright and the seamen he represents than was expressed by the slim attendance on Thursday night at the Collegiate Institute Hall.

Pension Fund for the Police Advocated by Chief Thompson

Gives Permanency to the Department and Is Decided Asset to Efficiency—Relieves Men of Worry About the Future—What Other Cities Have Done.

In the opinion of Councillor Peter Wright of the British Seamen's Union, who was the guest of the Peterboro Club on Thursday night, the local police force should be increased and a pension fund should be established for the men. Associated as he is with one of the strongest unions in the world, Mr. Wright is naturally interested in labor questions and in the conditions of workingmen. He is chairman of the Norfolk Watch and from that connection has studied municipal policing not only in Great Britain but in other countries also.

Referring to this question of pensions, Chief Thompson stated that unquestionably such a fund was desirable, if not an actual necessity. Some of the larger cities in Canada have founded and have for years been operating these funds. In this country and elsewhere there is ample precedent showing that the idea is by no means a new one, and proving that it makes for efficiency, permanency and satisfaction in any force.

Efficiency plus Permanency

The men of Peterboro's police department are all comparatively young. Each year's experience undoubtedly enhances their ability as constables they gradually become familiar with the city, they know by sight the people, and strangers immediately register the fact of their recent arrival at first glance. View their work in the light of a business and the old truth that experience increases their efficiency must be recognized. There comes a time, however when the physical vigor of the men begins to wane Advancing age takes its toll, and the constable loses his energy and his value to the department. A few men may have the fortune to secure a chief constable's position here or elsewhere, but the most of the men must continue to serve in the ranks until their retirement. Eventually, they must be removed, and it for that period of their life the pension fund provides.

Would Hold the Men.

It is obvious that the promise of a pension will not only influence a constable to remain on the force, but that it will also affect the performance of his duty. To the extent that it is a reward for continuous faithful service, it becomes a reward to be won, and inversely it must not be forfeited by dismissal for carelessness of neglect on his part. Hence, assuming that a capable force has been organized, the element of permanency is fostered by the Pension Fund.

What Other Cities Have Done.

Chief Thompson recalled that London, Ontario, instituted such a fund years ago with an annual grant of $500 from the city council. The policemen contributed five per cent of their salaries, and donations from various sources helped swell the sum. By this means an adequate fund was established. The term of service that would qualify a policeman for a pension may vary, but in some cities the men are retired after twenty-five years.

In any case the men know that as the years pass they will not be thrown on the scrap heap when their efficiency as policemen comes to an end. They are thus relieved of an anxiety that must inevitably lessen their usefulness, and the community they have given their best years to protect assists in providing for them in their decline.

It is more than likely that Chief Thompson will make an appeal to the police Commission and thus to the Council for Pension Fund for Peterboro's police department. He can point to the fact that the local force is comprised of young men, who may be retained in the service for many years. Most of them are comparatively new comers, and they have proven their worth. In fact it may be said that the first requisite of permanency has been secured in the capability of Peterboro's police. Chief Thompson is doubtless impelled by a desire to secure permanency in his department, and as indicated above to maintain the present efficiency. To that end he urges the foundation of a Pension Fund, and the present suggestion may soon develop into a concrete proposal and request for the Council's sympathy and support.

Merchants Report Big Holiday Trade

Merchants report that the Christmas business is surpassing even their most sanguine hopes. "We are doing one hundred dollars a day more this week than during the same time last year," said one retailer yesterday, and others intimate that their receipts are equally satisfactory. In fact the vanishing war clouds are being generally followed by evidences of the normal conditions of peace, and prevailing prosperity. This yuletide will be the occasion of many festivities for which the people had neither desire nor thought during the war. Numerous dances and other social events are set for the remaining days of the 1918 calender, and the young people are looking expectantly to a gaiety that has long been absent.

The man or woman who is run-down, not feeling up to the mark, perhaps irritable, nervous or sleepless, can well afford to learn about the wonderful results the newly discovered blood-food is giving to folks that use it.

There is wonderful power in this new blood-food, and every weak, pallid person can be quickly nourished back to health that uses it as directed.

After each meal, with a sip or two of water, you simply take two little chocolate-coated tablets, sold in all drug stores under the name of "FERROZONE."

The effect is noticeable at once. You feel happier, brighter, more contented. That old-time feeling of weariness departs—you forget your "nerves" and no longer get irritable or cross over trifling annoyances.

There is a reason for this change and that reason consists of the fact that Ferrozone contains blood-making materials you can get in no other way.

Ferrozone makes the blood tingle and sing with new vitality. This ensures lots of nourishment and strength being supplied to every part of the body.

No wonder the eyes brighten and the cheeks radiate color and happiness: With abundance of strength, a keen appetite, good digestion and plenty of sound sleep—all the result of Ferrozone—you quickly feel as if life held new charms and pleasures.

Old silk makes the best possible dusters. It does not shed, lint, does not scratch and is easily washed.

No Opposition Appearing for Mayor Duncan's Second Term

In the rumblings of the approaching municipal elections there is no note of opposition to Mayor Duncan's second term as Chief Magistrate. This presage of his re-election by acclamation is partly a recognition of the custom that is becoming fixed in Peterborough of according the Mayor two years. Beyond that, however, it is an expression of appreciation of the diligence with which he has discharged the duties of his office during the past year. Fortunately he was in a position to meet every demand on his time and he gave of it unstintingly. He visited the city hall practically every day, and frequently spent parts of both morning and evening, without considering the numerous meetings at night. And he used this time with industry and well directed energy. Moreover, the smallest questions received the same degree of attention as the most pressing. Mayor Duncan has devoted himself to the city's business without pose or affectation, and has been entirely unspoiled by the responsibility and dignity that is inherent in the office of Mayor. With Aldermen Dobbin and Taylor he spent many anxious hours during the spring and summer months about the problem of the winter's supply of coal, and was finally rewarded as the expected cold season drew near by the arrival of quantities that insured the city against a scarcity of coal similar to last year's experience. It is unnecessary to review the work of the Council to indicate the manner and results of Mayor Duncan's leadership. At times he manifested a desire to make bold strokes, but the dominant attitude of retrenchment stopped such movements in their tracks. The affairs of the first peace year should give him every opportunity to lead the Council, if the mooted revolution doesn't keep him busy using the "new broom."

A Little Lad's Panic

A little chap of about three or four years attracted the attention of the afternoon shoppers on George street the other day by running half a block crying "I want my mamma." He was almost in a frenzy of fear that was excited by the separation from the hand and face of the only person he knew in the crowd of strangers that stepped unthinkingly, but not unsympathetically out of his way. With little scrambling strides he cried hoarsely, and searched through eyes full of tears the faces of those who glanced at him. Up the street a woman was calling to the sidewalk crowd to stop him, but she finally had to overtake him. Both arms full of parcels suggested that she had visited the toy shops and left a complimentary report with Santa Claus of her little man. There was a world of relief, of pain and joy, in his long drawn "aw-w" when his mother caught up with him, and he heard the words that every boy of that age hears and soon forgets: "Here's mother, son."

Correspondent Says Germans Live High

LONDON, Dec. 20.—A British war correspondent at Cologne writes:

"I have sought evidence everywhere of the state of Germany in regard to food and other material. My first impression of every town and village I have entered is of great wealth, well built houses, a number of newly built, active factories and well-clothed people. Boots are good and stuffs are good.

"While copper and brass were being stolen from Belgium, they were being freely exhibited in the shops of cologne. Even the poorest people wear good boots, though leather is scarcely procurable. The hotels and shops are luxurious, and the cafes are full at most hours up to eleven at night, with people eating ices and fancy cakes and drinking various forms of coffee and chocolate.

"I defy anyone in a walk down Cologne high street to find in the crowd or shops any sign whatever of diminished prosperity or consciousness of national defeat. It can scarcely be that the grain supplies of Germany are not sufficient, at any rate for the next three or four months, to supply the population. Doctors I have consulted say that they find few signs of mulnutrition, but undoubtedly fat starvation is threatened."

GEE, BUT IT'S GOOD FOR A BAD COLD

Nothing Can Touch Catarrhozone In Curing Quickly

You may dislike taking medicine—but coughs are best cured without medicine. The modern treatment is "Catarrhozone"—it isn't a drug—it's a healing vapor full of pine essences and healing balsams. It spreads over the surfaces that are weak and sore from coughing. Every spot that is congested is healed — irritation is soothed away, phlegm and secretions are cleaned out, and all symptoms of cold and catarrh are cured. Nothing so quick, nothing so sure, so pleasant as Catarrhozone. Beware of dangerous substitutes meant to deceive you for genuine Catarrhozone Large size which lasts two months, price $1.00 small size 50c sample size 25c, at all dealers.

Mr. Burnham Favours Women for S. Board

Apropos to the nomination of two members of the Local Council of Women for the Board of Education, Mr. J. H. Burnham gives his opinion, although he cannot boast of being the father of a very large family, that women should be candidates for the School Board, and that it is their duty so to do, for surely no one has more to do with children and their studies than have their mothers.

Hardware and Metal Markets

Lower Prices in Many Lines—Linseed Oil Fluctuates.

Lower prices have been established in the base price of rope this week, the new quotations showing a decline of 2c per pound, says the Hardware and Metal for this week. Factors contributing to this move are lower fibre prices and a reduction in ocean freight rates. The market is steady at the decline, and with stocks throughout the country generally light, a good trade is looked for during the coming year.

LINSEED OIL

Linseed oil is again furnishing excitement, an advance of 6c per gallon being recorded. The result has been a marked narrowing of the range of quotations, and the market carries a steadier tone than for the past two or three weeks. There is little movement at the present time, a seasonable condition.

In an effort, it is said, to stimulate sales, a decline as been recorded in turpentine amounting to 5c per gallon. Markets in the South, after a period of quiet, even dullness, show a little more activity with a firming influence resulting in a stiffening of prices.

HEAVY HARDWARE

Quotations issued this week on barn door hangers and track and parlor door hangers and track show advances over previous figures. Candle wick has reached a very high figure, and a revision in collar pads upward has been made. Electric light globes have declined, and a lower sale of quotations on copper and brass rods, tubes and sheets has been reached.

LOGGING CHAINS

Coil chain is up from 15c to 80c per hundred pounds, and log chain has also reached a figure from 15 to 25c above former levels. Pump oilers are up from 10 to 15 per cent. New list prices have been named on canvas belting, along with a change in the discount, giving a net result which shows quotations about 10 per cent higher.

Ingot metals are again fluctuating lower prices having been established on tin, spelter and lead in some quarters. There is little activity at present, trading being confined to very small parcels.

Cigarette Smoking Among the Ladies in Peterboro is Becoming More Popular

The Bohemian Set Know What They Want and Usually Get It—What Local Tobacconists Say.

According to some of the tobacconists of this city, Bohemianism is fast invading the Puritannical Peterboro in the form of smoking among the ladies of the city. Purchasing tobacco is camouflaged by the fair sex fairly cleverly to the casual observer, out not well enough to fool th etobacconists. In nine cases out of ten the destination of the tobacco bought by women is for someone overseas, but the tenth is undoubtedly for the fair one's own use. "We can easily spot the smoker," said one tobaccomist, "by the way she buys the smokes." She asks immediately for some mild brand and then asks for advice which she really doesn't want and won't certainly use. Such a brand? tabacconist suggests. 'No they are too strong.' She knows just what she wants and invariably gets it in the long run."

While the habit is undoubtedly growing among the smart set, the dealers say the sales do not indicate that the habit is growing to such an extent that ladies will smoke in public at any near date.

MR. HATTON MET THE COUNTY COMMITTEE AT THE COURT HOUSE

If the committee of the County Council this morning has been in a genial and receptive mood they might have had the sense of humour to whistle "See the Conquering Hero Comes" as Crown Attorney Hatton met them in the County Clerk's office to reach an agreement as to the office accommodation available for him. The feelings of the Reeves may be imagined. It was not so much that they had to pay the Crown Attorney $530, that wouldn't have bothered them, but to have been beaten in the court, to have lost their case, that was the rub. The Warden was smiling as usual, but that smile can be a perfect mask, and in fact most of the Councillors can disguise their feelings with more than one facial expression.

Hence, although Mr. Hatton's appearance must have been salt in the wound Mr. Justice Kelly opened, everything was apparently harmonious and pervaded by the benign spirit of Christmas. County Clerk Elliott hadn't a chirp, and seemed unusually grave. It can be imagined that Mr. Hatton met his erstwhile opponents with a smile of satisfaction that was warmed every time he thought of the judgment proving the right of his contentions. He was there to collect the spoils, usually a most gratifying experience and he could afford to be as bland and friendly as the situation would permit.

SPECIAL CHRISTMAS SERVICES AT SALVATION ARMY TEMPLE

Ensign Beer, of Toronto, with a male quartette, will participate in special Chirstmas services at the Salvation Army Temple to-morrow. A big open air service will be held on the corner of Simcoe and George streets at 7.30 p.m.

Open air services to-morrow:

10 a.m.—Reid and King streets.

2.15 p.m.— Hunter and George streets.

Public are invited.

THE SACRED SYMBOL

The Cross! The shadow of it fell up a certain manger in Bethlehem—the same Bethlehem freed in the turmoil of the war and now recaling to the world "On earth peace, good will toward men."

For the same symbol, during years of awful conflict, men have been struggling and dying. Eyes have been turned from the sacred sign in the hands of a consoler to the repeated sign reverently placed by the hands of military authority as a tribute of the people of courage that did not falter.

And the invalided hero, returning to the old home, carries on his breast the token that announces recognition of his part in the great effort toward a right establishment of peace on earth.

Brave women, who have made untold sacrifices at the bedsides of the wounded, have carried the same symbol, silently, patiently, devotedly, without special rewards, or special fame, content to do their plucky part in the splendid work.

Such women know, all the world knows, that the symbol has been attached to but a few of all the heroes, yet the sign has its nobility just the same. At the hour of one of the most impressive Christmas seasons in the whole history of the world the Cross has, indeed, a deeper significance than ever it held.

The world is told that the ordeal through which it has passed has exerted a vast and momentous influence upon the religious emotions of the world, without regard to any creed or sect. In the presence of such a fact we may well see in the Christmas now dawning a profound and inspiring beauty. New emotions individual and national, will affect every feature of an observance that always has a wider meaning than any formula of sect, and that must inevitably gather still more various meanings in so significant a crisis in the history of the nation and of its individual hearts.

SPECIAL SERVICES IN TRINITY CHURCH

An attractive programme of Christmas music will be given at Trinity Church both morning and evening to-morrow. The splendid choir of the church will be assisted in the morning by a Junor Choir that will sing a number of Christmas carols. The pastor, the Rev. F. E. Malott will preach at both services. A cordial invitation is extended to strangers and visitors to attend these services.

UPLIFT DEPT. AT OTTAWA.

Hon. N. W. Rowell is Fathering Pet Scheme—Session in February.

OTTAWA, Dec. 19. — The Union Government indicates more or less hesitation about calling the session until the time of the return of Sir Robert Borden is known. Word has been received from the Premier that he will be home sooner than was expected. He says that he hopes to be back in February, or at the latest in March. The Cabinet proposes to call the session between the first and the middle of February.

Hon. N. W. Rowell's statement that the matter of creating a Department of "Public Welfare" has not yet been before the Cabinet Council, is not to be accepted as a denial that such a proposition is being evolved in the mind of the President of the Council. The Department would administer old age pensions, maternity insurance, housing, etc., and be the directing mechanism of machinery for general moral uplift.

The Germans in Cologne are said to be openly defying the British martial law. They evidently do not believe there is any danger of the British using the tactics that were employed by the Germans in Belgium.

How Christmas Day Will Be Observed in the Various Institutions Throughout City

Christmas Tree Will be Provided for the Little Folks at the Shelter—Inmates of the Homes Will be Well Looked After—Special Fare for Inmates of County Gaol.

Christmas Day will be fittingly celebrated in the public institutions, principally at the bounty of kind-hearted citizens. In most all the institutions a Christmas tree will help make the day a little like the homes the inmates are deprived of by circumstances.

At the Children's Shelter ten little children who are inmates and five wards out in homes in the city will have a tree with some gift for each and a special Christmas dinner. In the evening the Board will be invited to the Shelter at 7.30 to attend a specially prepared programme.

Old People's Homes.

At the House of Providence, where there are eighty old people for some of whom this will probably be the last Christmas on earth, no effort is spared to make make the day happy. A little remembrance is laid upon eacn bed and over such gifs in previous years the receiver was always childishly happy

At the Protestant Home where 30 old people will spend Christmas, the celebration proper takes place on Christmas eve, when a tree bearing a gift for each inmate will be lighted up and a programme given Special Christmas menus will be provided for the old people in both homes.

St. Vincent's Orphanage

At St. Vincent's Orphange presents sent in by both friends of the children and well-wishers will be placed in each child's stocking. The day will start with the forty-four little ones attending Mass. Not only will a regulation Christmas dinner be provided, but special menus for breakfast and tea.

County Gaol

Even the prisoners at the County Jaol are not forgotten and the gaoler personally provides a Christmas dinner at his own expense. This year nine men who are in gaol at present will enjoy a goose and other seasonable delicacies. At times the prisoners receive presents from someone who has not forgotten them, but in the majority of cases the Christmas dinner is the only treat in the monotony of the prison life.

Small fortunes were invested in fowl this morning at the Christmas market. Ducks and geese were very plentiful, some of the farmers having whole waggon loads of them. Chickens were scarce but quarters of beef and pork were everywhere in evidence.

The crowd was unusually large. It reminded many of the older citizens of the days when eggs were 14c a dozen and a bag of potatoes was worth 50c. Th following prices prevailed at 10 o'clock.

Beef sold in quarters at 27c a lb.
Pork in quarters, 28c to 30c a lb.
Turkeys, plentiful, at 40c a lb.
Geese sold at 30c a lb.
Chickens, scarce, 29c a lb.
Snow apples, fairly plentiful, at 35c a peck.

Eggs, 70c, with a tendency to lower prices.
Good potatoes, at $1.70 bag.

BILIOUSNESS

How to Prevent and Cure

Among the earliest symptoms are furred tongue and dull headache.

Then come dizzy spells, bad taste, quick pulse, fever and cold sweats.

Finaliy, sleeplessness and vomiting make the condition of the sufferer almost intolerable.

The root of biliousness is with the liver which is clogged and can't keep bile from getting into the blood.

Nothing works with the certainty of Dr Hamilton's Pills; they act directly on the liver, restore the bile to its proper course and prevent it from contaminating the vital fluid

Of course the bowels are ordered and relaxed by Dr. Hamilton's Pills the kidneys receive new tonic, the blood is renovated, and the result is a renewal of good health.

No need for delay, the sooner you use Dr. Hamilton's Pills, the sooner you'll feel the brisk, keen, satisfaction of a healthy, well-regulated system. Sold in yellow boxes, 25c.

When you tire of broiled chicken try stuffing and roasting a small broiler.

Those mechanics who have served a year receive 15 days' extra pay of rank, and if they have served two years they receive 30 days' pay of rank. Separation allowance ceased on the day of temporary discharge. Besides their post discharge pay the men will be allowed a pass home and $14 clothing allowance, and will be allowed to retain their uniforms and will receive a gratuity of $7. As the R.A.F. belongs to the imperial and not the Canadian overseas forces, they will not share in the Canadian grant of three months' post discharge pay awarded members of the C.E.F., it is stated.

Don't Forget the Little Ones This Year.

Voice of The People

Peterborough, Dec. 20th.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—May I correct a statement attributed to me in to-night's account of the meeting of the Local Council of Women?

I did not state that I had been offered the vacancy on the Board of Education, due to the death of Dr. Burnham. My statement was that a member of the Board had asked me to allow by name to go before the Board—when the position might, or might not have been offered to me.

Though much interested in the work of this most important body, I had to decline the honour of having my name brought forward at that time.

KATE MORRIS.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir, — The lady candidate for the Board of Education who professes to have such knowledge of house building, should certainly prove it by giving to the public a series of articles or by publishing a book on the subject.

It would surely be a grave economic error that more houses should be spoilt in the building while this knowledge, these original ideas, lie latent in our midst. There are so many improvements needed to climb nearer to perfection that no "new" ideas should be lost. Even Woman's Dress, with its ever changing fashions, has failed to attain the practical, the convenient, sanitary or artistic, and improvements so sorely needed.

Yours truly,
